(Heber W. Youngken, Textbook of Pharmacognosy, Philadelphia, The Blakiston Co., 1950, p. 909). "Safflower, obtained from carthamus tinctorius, has been discovered in early stone pots in Mesopotamia. The seeds of this plant, which have been found stored in Theban tombs of c 2000 BC, were used for the production of a vegetable oil. ITs use as a dye (ranging from pale red to golden) in ancient Egypt has been confirmed by chemical analyses of sheets of yellow linen in which mummies were wrapped. Its name in classical antiquity is derived from an oriental root meaning yellow." (Charles Singer, E.J. Holmyard, A.R.Hall, Trevor I. Williams, A History of Technology, Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1967, p. 246). Carthamus tinctorius (Ancient Egyptian k3t3; Coptic xoyx; Modern Egyptian Arabic qurt.um) 'Safflower is an annual herb with yellow flowers, apparently indigenous to Persia and north-west India, but introduced in Egypt during the New Kingdom if not before (c.1567 BC). It is frequently mentioned in Ptolemaic texts, and it grows in abundance in the fields today. The seeds produce a bland oil used for cooking and salads. The flowers yield a yellow colour, soluble in water, and a more permanent red, which has been used for dyeing silk, and in the manufacture of rouge... Dioscorides says that the Egyptians called it khino... Pliny says that the Egyptians did not consume safflower oil, but used it as a protection against poisonous stings... Egyptians found the flower pleasing to the eye and included it in the garlands laid on the mummies of their relatives. Remains of safflower were found in the tomb of Tutankhamun (1567-1320 BC).' It grows on the Himalayas at an elevation of 5,000-8,500 ft. The exudation of de_vada_ru was called kunduruka (B.Sam.. LVI.2; comm. kunduruko devada_ruvr.ks.a-nirya_sah.). Br.hatsam.hita_ refers to the guilds of ded.ayatrikas; this perhaps refers to itinerant traders of this product of deodar. According to Dioscorides 'cedar' is a preservative of dead (bodies). Cedrus deodara, pinus deodara:

devadaru (Skt.B.); deodar (H.); dewdar (P.); keli (P.); tevadari (Ta.); devadri (Te.); wood: diaphoretic, diuretic, carminative, useful in fever, flatulence, pulmonary and urinary disorders, rheumatism, piles, gravels in kidney; oil: diaphoretic, used in skin diseases and for ulcer; bark: astringent, useful for fevers, diarrhea and dysentery; gum, cholesterin, essential oil; wood yields oil with balsamic odour; habitat: north-western Himalayas from Kashmir to Garhwal at 4,000 - 10,000 ft. (GIMP, p.56). Cedar: {Juniper phoenicea, juniperus drupacea = pinus cedrus. (Ancient Egyptian 2'n; Coptic (the resin perhaps cipe = Ancient Egyptian sft = pinus cedrus; Greek cedar (Herodotus and Diodorus); Modern Egyptian Arabic 'ar'ar) 'Juniper trees grow up to 5m in height and can attain an age of several hundred years. They were probably never indigenous to Egypt proper, although a group of juniper phoenicea actually grows in the mountains of Sinai. Most juniper timber was imported, presumably from Asia Minor, where it grew in abundance. The wood was used in carpentry, and the berries had multiple uses in medicine. The berries have an aromatic resinous flavour and are frequently used in stews, particularly to emphasise the flavour of game. The distilled oil adds its characteristic flavour to the Dutch genever. Juniper branches impart a delicate aroma to grilled food, and they were once used as a fumigant. The berries and leaves of various varieties of juniper are widely used in herbal medicine, being antiseptic, diuretic, stimulant and carminative... An infusion of milk of juniper berries, cumin, frankincense and an unidentified pod along with bone marrow was given to a woman who had not been menstruating for several years... Prospero Alpini says that juniper oil was used to massage the body before an attack of fever was expected... In ancient Egypt an oil scented with essential oil of juniper was used in mummification to anoint the corpse. The berries have been shown to have been mixed with the salt in which the bodies were laid for dehydration, at least among the early Christians... While discussing 'cedar' Dioscorides adds that "it is a preservative of dead (bodies), hence some have called it 'the life of him that is dead'". Sawdust and wood pitch of juniper have also been found on pharaonic mummies. Sawdust was one of the ingredients in a refreshing poultice which included various resins, wax, coriander, pork fat and ox fat. The twigs of juniper were added to a prescription for a patient suffering from illness in the head and neck. It consisted of ladanum, frankincense, kohl, red ochre, ibex fat and an unidentified balm, to be grated and made into a bandage. There is evidence of juniper having been used for dyeing in ancient times. A text tells that "fresh juniper" was employed to dye a strip of linen used in the cult at the temple of Dendara in Upper Egypt. When mordanted with alum or chrome juniper berries produce a pale creamy-brown dye.' {Lise Manniche, An Ancient Egyptian Herbal, British Museum Publcations Ltd., pp.111-112). deb daru dare, eroj the cedar tree (Santali.lex.) Juniperus communis or depressa: part used: the dried ripe fruit; habitat: Asia (in the dry woods), Europe, USA, northern Africa; uses: as a stimulant and stimulating diuretic in cystitis. Juniperus virginiana or eastern red cedar is a shrub or tree of pyramidal form... its wood is widely employed in the form of chips as an insect repellant and is also used in the manufacture of cedar chests and pencils. It is also the source of a volatile oil called 'cedar oil' which is a valuable clearing agent in microscopy. (Heber W. Youngken, Textbook of Pharmacognosy, Philadelphia, The Blakiston Co., 1950, p. 128). Mummification: Herodotus reports three classes of mummification. Each class had the common process of anointing the body with cedar-oil and other ointments. Mummification is not identical with embalming (which literally means 'to place in balsam')... dehydrating the body with dry natron (sodium bicarbonate) in wooden boxes or mats was the basic operation... mummies of Dynasty XI (c 2050-2000 BC)... after desiccation with natron, the body was swathed in linen followed by a layer of linen soaked in a resinous aromatic mixture... (Charles Singer, E.J. Holmyard, A.R.Hall, Trevor I. Williams, A History of Technology, Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1967, p. 267-269). "The tomb of the pharaoh at Abydos was... a mastaba... the introduction of the mastaba gave impetus to a new craft at court -- embalming. Separated from the drying sands by walls of brick, a corpse quickly decayed. The first measure taken in response to this problem was cosmetic: swathing the body in linen bandages, soaked in resin preserved the form of the body even as the flesh mouldered within... By the beginning of the Fourth Dynasty, about 2600 B.C., (the royal embalmers) were taking the first step towards true mummification. They removed the dead pharaoh's internal organs through an incision in the abdomen and placed them in a so-called canopic jar, a vessel filled with a salty solution known as natron. The body cavity was then dried and packed with resin-soaked linen before the exterior was prepared -- attentions that might include highlightin the face with green paint or decking out the shrouded corpse in jewellery and elegant robes.... In contrast to Mesopotamia, where commerce had come early to a merchant class... foreign trade was the province of the pharaoh, who commissioned royal ventures... One of the chief commodities sought by the king's agents was timber... a brisk trade had been conducted ... with the ancient trading centre of Byblos, on the coast of Lebanon near mountains studded with cedars... there is no record of their taking to the seas before before the Fourth Dynasty... Among the most ambitious of the commercial expeditions sponsored (by the Twelfth Dynasty rulers) were those to a realm that Egyptian scribes called Punt, on the East African coast near present-day Somalia. To reach Punt -- source of frankincense, myrrh and other fragrant resins used by the Egyptians in religious ceremonies -- caravans had first to complete an eight-day trek across the blazing eastern desert from Koptos on the Upper Nile to the Red Sea. To complicate matters, the conscripts asigned to the task had to carry with them the dismantled sections of the ship that would bear them southwards down the African coast. The leader of one such expedition described the ordeal in the matter-of-fact tone generally adopted by Egyptian officials in their reports: 'My lord sent me to dispatch a ship to Punt to bring back fresh myrrh. I left with an army of 3,000 men. Every day I issued to each a leathern bottle, two jars of water, 20 pieces of bread. Then I reached the Red Sea, made the ship and despatched it'... thus the Egyptians assured themselves a steady influx of such prized iteems as timber and olive oil in exchange for their surplus stores of flax, papyrus, salted fish, ox hide, alabaster and gold." (The Age of God-kings, 3000-1500 B.C., Amsterdam, Time-Life Books, 1991, pp. 59-60; p. 81; p. 85). "Probably the earliest reference to the use of incense in any religion occurs in the notice of Sanchkara, a king of the XIth dynasty, who sent an expedition through the desert to the Red Sea towards the incense land of Punt... Punt is probably Hadramaut and Somaliland. Incense was also obtained from Gilead. A common representation on the wall of temples is that of a king offering incense. He holds a censer in one hand and with the other throws little balls or pastilles of incense upon it, praying the god to accept it and give him a long life. Immense quantities of incense are often spoken of as having been offered, e.g. 1000 censers, or, as an inscription referring to Rameses III reports, 1,933,766 pieces of incense, etc., during the 31 years of his reign. It was offered to all the gods, who delighted in its odour, their statues being censed with it and perfumed. Often it accompanied other offerings, greater or smaller -- e.g., frankincense, myrrh, and other perfumes were placed in the carcass of the bullock offered to Isis (Herod, ii.40)... At funerary rites, the deceased was purified with incense. Five grains were twice offered to mouth, eyes, and hand, once for the north and once for the south; thence incense from foreign parts was similarly offered, along with the litany of purification. Myrrh, resin, etc., but not frankincense, were placed in the body which was embalmed... Incense, in the sense of a gum resin, does not seem to have been used in Greece until post-Homeric times, and Pliny (Hist. Nat. xiii.1) says that people knew only the smell of cedar and citrus as it arose in volumes of smoke from the sacrifice... Hindus have always been fond of pleasant odours, and India was alreay celebrated for its perfumes in ancient times. Incense from Arabia was early imported there, but many native kinds of sweet-smelling materials have long been in use-- flowers and fragrant woods. These are burned ritually or in ordinary domestic usage. In ancient times sandal-wood was burned as incense in temples and as a fragrant stuff in houses, and in the daily rites the sacred fire was fed with consecrated wood, usually from the Pala_s'a tree... in the cult of S'iva it is daily burned by the priest before the stone representing the god at Orissa, and perfumes are also placed on it... Camphor and incense are burned before the image of Kr.s.n.a, and in the demon cults of Western India perfumes are commonly burned. In the Pacha_yatana ceremony of the Bra_hman house-holder perfumes and flowers are offered, and among the sixteen acts of homage is the offering of perfumes, sandal, flowers, and incense (dhu_pa)... in Ceylon, perfumes and flowers are offered before the image of Buddha, and in the Pirit ceremonial incense is burned round the platform on which the relics of Buddha are exposed. But it is in Tibet that the use of incense is most prevalent... In Japanese Buddhism, incense is also commonly used, and has influenced the native Shinto religion... Herodotus (vi.97) describes Darius burning 300 talents of frankincense upon the altar (in Persia)... in a passage of the Vendi_da_d (xix.24) it is called 'incense of vohu-gaona -- 'Thou shalt perfume vohu-mano (perhaps an idol) therewith.' Sandalwood and incense are burned in modern Parsi ritual... In Muhammadan cults proper, incense is not used, but it is commonly offered at the shrines of saints, and is permitted by the traditions as a perfume for a corpse... among all Muhammadans it is burned in houses on braziers, or at marriage processions it is burned in a mibkharah... or in the scinece of da'wah... the materials used for incense are frankincense, benzoin, storax, coriander-seed, aloes-wood, etc." (James Hastings, Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics, New York, Charles Scribner's Sons, 1915, p.203). "Throughout the early centuries of the New Kingdom Egypt's foreign trade appears to have been practically a royal, or government, monopoly, heavily protected by tolls and tariffs and carried out largely by caravans and ships owned or controlled by the crown or by one of the departements of the pharaonic administration... the so-called 'traders for foreign land', mentioned occasionally in inscriptions, were probably government agents, rather than independent merchants. Moreover, apart from a tomb painting showing some primitive Puntite sailing rafts bringing goods to a port on the Red Sea coast, there is only one Eighteenth Dynasty (1567-1320 BC) representation of foreign merchant ships in an Egyptian harbour... delegations of Hittite, Keftiu, Puntite, and other foreign traders are represented in Egyptian tomb paintings... invariably shown delivering their merchandise (nearly always called 'tribute' or 'gifts') to a crown official... " (I.E.S. Edwards et al (eds.) The Cambridge Ancient History, Vol. II, Part I, 1973, pp. 386-387). The early route to India from Egypt and Asia Minor was through the Red Sea, hugging the Arabian and the 'incense-land' of Punt (present-day Somali on the east coast of Africa near the southern end of the Red Sea) coasts and through the mouth of the Persian Gulf to the mouth of the Indus River (Mohenjo-Daro) or Gulf of Cambay (Lothal)... The South West monsoon route to India reaching the Malabar coast was discovered at the time of Hero... Both (1) Punt and (2) Arabian coasts were centres for trade in (1) gold, ivory, aromatic gums, incense; (2) spices, aromatic gums respectively. (J.H. Breasted et al. (eds.), European History Atlas, Chicago, 3rd edn.) Cement: madana randia dumetorum popularly called dhatu_ra_; its fruit, madanaphala formed an ingredient of vajralepa, a cement. (B.Sam.. LVI.5) 'The Br.hatsam.hita_ (57, 1-8) gives an account of some adamantine compositions like vajra-lepa and vajra-sam.ghata. Vajra-lepa consists of extracts of certain types of plants, fruits, seeds, barks etc. (like unripe ebony fruit, wood-apple), blossoms of silk cotton and guggulu (a fragrant gum; exudation of amyris agallochum = amyris commiphora = commiphora agallocha). The process described is as follows: 'boil them in a dron.a of water and reduce it to an eighth of its original volume. Mix the residue with sri_va_s'aka (probably the resin of pinus longifolia), kunduru_ka (exudation of deodar), guggulu, linseed, resin of bilva fruit, etc., and make it into a paste.' This glutinous material could be applied on to the roofs and walls of temples and mansions. Its life has been stated to be ten million years. Vajra-sam.gha_ta is a metal-cement consisting of eight parts of lead, two of bell-metal and one of iron rust or brass. It is melted and poured hot as desired.' (D.N.Bose, S.N.Sen and B.V. Subbarayappa (eds.), A Concise History of Science in India, Indian National Science Academy, New Delhi, 1971, p.308). kuntalin:kam benzoin tree (W.); ca_mpira_n.i, styrax benzoin = frankincense, olibanum, gum benzoin (Pata_rtta. 1072)(Ta.lex.) (Indian Medicinal Plants, pp.520-523). East African Coast: '...The earliest written accounts of the East African coast occur in the Periplus Maris Erythraei -- apparently written by a Greek merchant living in Egypt in the second half of the 1st century AD -- and in Ptolemy's Guide to Geography ... (which) records the existence of six or so places (in Somaliland) where some kind of commerce was being organized and notes that regular customs dues were collected from both sides of what was later to be called Cape Guardafui. Ships, it goes on, sailed from the coast to western India to bring back cotton cloth, grain, oil, sugar, and ghee, while others moved down the Red Sea to the East African coast bringing cloaks, tunics, copper, and tin. Aromatic gums, tortoiseshell, ivory, and slaves were traded in return ... (Arab traders) dubbed the part of the coast to which they sailed (south of modern Somalia) Azania, or the Land of Zanj -- by which they meant the land of the blacks and by which they knew it till the 10th century... the chief town was Rhapta ... tortoise shell and rhinoceros horn were exported from there -- as were quantities of ivory and coconut oil -- no mention is made of slaves. Rhapta's main imports were metal weapons and iron tools -- suggesting that iron smelting was not yet known ... Azania ... was more usually directly subordinate to the people of Mocha in Yemen... (Encyclopaedia Britannica, 22nd edn., Vol. 6, p.91.) Thure and myrrh: 'Fifty-fifth colloquy: thure and myrrh. Why do they write of two kinds of incense, one of Arabia and the other of India?... Orta: ... It is brought from Arabia where it called lovam, corrupted from the Greek word olibano, which is much used by them. They also call it conder, namely, Avicenna, for conder or condros means resin, and camac means gum in Arabic. It is true that Serapio calls it ronder, but that name is corrupt. For I have spoken with many Arabs about it and they all call it lovam, except a few who call it conder, but none call it ronder here nor in its own land where it grows... I have asked the Portuguese, who have lived for along time in this land, and all say that it has no other names, and that the tree is also called lovam. These men say that the best is from the hills, while that from the plains is bad, as it gets mixed with the resins of other trees and is used as pitch for the ships (emphasis provided). The trees are the property of the king and no one can gather from them without his license. The merchants come from Adem, Xael, and other parts of Arabia and contract with the king for the quantity they are to be allowed to gather, and the price they were to pay for the incense, being good and the price they were to pay for the incense, being good and what we call incenso macho. The price is not high. The best that is brought from Arabia to India is worth 2 cruzados the quintal. Ruan: Do they call it macho? Orta: No. The good incense is called meleto in India... The tree which produces this gum is not very large, and the leaves are like those of mastich. In India they do not adulterate or falsify it, as they would gain so little by doing so. The Indian doctors use a great deal of the incense for unguents and perfumes, and it is eaten for many diseases of the head, and for dysentry. But the greatest quantity is taken to China for sale, where it is largely used. Those who trade with it there make large profit, and it is also used in the parts bordering on Malacca, where the myrrh is also in demand, called bolla in India. Ruano: Dioscorides, Avicenna, and others say that it is in India, and that is black; but I know, as you have said, that there is no incense in India. Orta: This word indo is often taken for black. For instance Mesu speaks of mirabolonos indos, which are the black kind, as I told you in discussing them. Ruano: Now tell me about the myrrh. You have said such a few new things about incense, that it is fair that you should now say where the myrrh comes from and what it like. Orta: Much comes to India from Arabia and the land of Abexim (Abyssinia) which is in Ethiopia, but the truth about this gum has never been ascertained, nor what the tree is like; only a merchant who traded between Melinde and Mozambique told me that the Bedouins brought it by land from Brava and Magadaxo, and that they came, according to what they said, from Caldea, so called by these Bedouins. These men were mountaineers, and spoke pure Arabic, which is said to be nearer the Caldean language than the ancient Syriae... (Abexim priest) said that magoxi, in that Caldean language, means a man of letters or learning, and these were the magos that came to worship our Lord. He said that these men were not kings but men of great learning, as well in the stars as in other things of nature... the star which guided these magos was not a natural celestial one, but an elemental one, such as we call a comet... Ruano: ... but I should rejoice if you would tell me something more about the incense, for our castilians say that it is in the Western Indies of our King. Orta: I only tell you what I know to be well authenticated... as I have not seen, I cannot say whether it is true or not... Footnote by the translator: Tus, or Turis, meaning incense in general (from 0vtia, an 'offering', a victim 'offered' in sacrifice), here refers to frankincense (i.e. 'pure' 'incense'), the Hebrew lebonah, 'milky', 'white' (cf. The first two make up the bulk of the frankincense of commerce, while the last is reserved, chiefly in South-Western Arabia and North-Eastern Africa, for special use... Colebrooke, supplies a semi-fluid oleo-resinous exudation, the salika, contracted to salia (meaning 'running', 'drooling'), of the people of the country, and 'Indian olibanim' of Anglo-Indians. Myrrh is obtained from the Burceraceous balsamodendron myrrha, Nees, of North-East Africa and South-East Arabia; and the bazaars of India, is always mixed up with 'Indian bdellium' produced by the balsamodendron roxburghii, Arnot, of Assam.' (G. Da Orta (c. 1490 to c. 1570), Colloquies on the Simple and Drugs of India, tr. by Clements, Markham, Delhi, Sri Satguru Publications, Delhi, 1913, repr. 1987, pp.447-450). 'Myrrh is called vola in Sanskrit and is described as an article to be had in the beniah's shop, thereby implying it to be an imported drug. It is said to be useful in fever, epilepsy and uterine affections, but is not much used in practice.' (Uday Chand Dutt, The Materia Medica of the Hindus, Varanasi, 1922, repr.1980, p.137.) Olibanum: 'frankincense, also called olibanum, aromatic gum resin containing volatile oil valued in ancient times in worship and as a medicine and still an important incense resin... semi-opaque irregular lumps or round or oblong teardrops covered with white dust... Heat develops a balsamic odour. Frankincense was used by the ancient Egyptians in their religious rites. It constituted part of the Jewish incense of the sanctuary and is frequently mentioned in the Pentateuch. The 1st century Roman natural historian Pliny the Elder described the characteristics of good-quality frankincense and mentioned it as an antidote to hemlock poisoning. The 11th-century Persian physician Avicenna recommended it for a wide range of bodily ailments. In China and elsewhere in the East, it was used both as an internal and external remedy, but according to modern Western medical theory, it has no special value. Frankincense is used in incense and fumigants and as a fixative in perfumes. The hardened gum resin, gum thus, from which spirits of turpentine is produced, is sometimes called common, or American, frankincense.' (Encyclopaedia Britannica, 22nd edn., Vol.IV, pp. 282-283.) 'Olibanum. boswellia carterii and other species of boswellia. Frankincense is a synonym; German. weihrauch; French. Encens... Part used: the gum resin. Habitat. Somaliland and Arabia... The bark is incised by natives of Arabia, Somaliland and the Sudan, and the exudation, in tears or masses, is gathered after it has dried. A large amount of the Arabian drug is carried to Aden and shipped to Bombay, India, from where it is exported to various parts of the world. British Somaliland also produced frankincense in considerable amounts, and lesser amounts are gathered in the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan... Uses. As an incense and infumigating pastilles and plasters; stimulant.'(Heber, W. Youngken, Textbook of Pharmacognosy, Philadelphia, The Blakiston Company, 1950, p. 510). Arab trade: '... Four main states are known to have established themselves in South Arabia -- Ma'i_n (of the Minaens), Saba' (of the Sabaeans), Qataba_n (Qitba_n) and Had.ramawt, in their territorial order from north to south and southeast... The choice by these states of seats somewhat away from the fertile land (e.g. Qarna_w (now Khirbah Ma'i_n), Yathi_l (now Bara_qish), Ma'rib (in what is now Yemen) indicates that the most significant basis on which their power and prosperity usually rested was trade... A main trading commodity was frankincense, a commodity then in great demand for ritual and other purposes in the lands of high civilization -- in Egypt and Mesopotamia north of Arabia, and later across the Mediterranean in Greece and the Roman Empire. Most of the frankincense was grown or collected in South Arabia itself, particularly in the Mahra region and in dhofar. This trade also carried the commodities brought by sea from India and East Africa to the ports of Cana (His.n al-Ghura_b) and Aden. Ma'i_n. Ma'i_n civilization seems to have been based entirely on trade activities. Autonomous Minaean trading colonies, whose task must have been to attend to trading affairs, are known to have existed in Dedan in northern Hejaz, in Timna', and in Shabwah. A group of Minaeans, indicated in inscriptions as m'n m s.rn [Note: ponetic cognate: se_n.i guild, division of army (Pali)(CDIAL 12718)] -- taken by many scholars to refer to the Minaeans of the colony at Dedan -- should most probably be identified as 'Ma'i_n of the caravan' or 'Ma'i_n of the expeditionary force', indicating the section of the Ma'i_n whose task was to lead or escort the caravans... Saba'... the earlier form of government in Saba' was under mukarribs, high priest-princes who combined religious and temporal power in the state and who peacefully gave way to kings... (sometime between 115 and 109 BC), the straits of Bab el-Mandeb at the southern tip of Arabia were opened for direct traffic from Egypt to India. This weakened the position of the overland incense traffic, which almost vanished within a century. The South Arabian states must have suffered a great blow; but another group which must have suffered were the Bedouin -- the 'arab and a'ra_b of the inscriptions -- who took part in the overland traffic and sold or hired camels to the South Arabians for this purpose... Qataba_n... The economy of Qataba_n rested on its share of the South Arabian trade and on an efficien tsystem of irrigation and agriculture... The temple administration also owned land and seems to have controlled a sizable part of the economy, including the trade...' (Encyclopaedia Britannica, 22nd edn., Vol.1, p.1044.} Frankincense. "A fragrant gum resin used ritually in the Old Testament (Ex. 30,34; Cant. 3,6) presented to the Christ Child by the Magi, offered in gold censers with the prayers of all the saints before the throne, and purchased in large quantities by the Babylonians before the fall of their city, that is, Imperial Rome. This precious incense is obtained by slitting the bark of many species of

Amyrids (e.g. boswellia carteri or serrata). These trees are found in India, on the western coast of Africa, and on the southern coast of Arabia. The best quality of frankincense is white when dry, and has the pleasing odor of balsam when burnt..." Incense. "Gums and spices were burnt as an act of worhip in the temple. Zachary was offering incense to the Lord within the sanctuary when the angel appeared to him (Luke 1,8-11)... It was one of the luxury wares sold in Babylon, that is, Imperial Rome." (John E. Steinmueller and Kathryn Sullivan, Catholic Biblical Encyclopedia, New Testament, New York, Joseph F. Wagner Inc., 1950, p.244; p.328). Arabian trade and commerce. "The chief importance of Arabia to the ancients lay in its exports, of which the most renowned was incense, a gum obtained from a certain tree by incisions made in the bark... Sprenger (Geog. p.299) regards the incense country as 'the heart of the commerce of the ancient world,' owing to the vast amount of it required for religious rites, and terms the Arabs, or more nearly, the inhabitants of the incense country, 'the founders of commerce as it existed in the ancient world.' It is perhaps noteworthy that the verb 'Arab' and its derivaties are used in Hebrew to signify 'commerce.'... incense... formed the basis of the proverbial wealth of the Sabaeans... Other scents and spices are also mentioned as Arabian exports; but we notice as interesting the observation of Glaser, that the particular spices mentioned in Ezk 27 as exported from a place we have grounds for locating in South Arabia do not really grow there. Almost as famous as the incense was the Arabian gold. The gold used by Solomon for gilding the temple is stated to have come from Parwaim, which is plausibly identified by Glaser with Sak-el-Farwain... in Central Arabia." (James Hastings (ed.), A Dictionary of the Bible, Edinburgh, T & T Clark, 1898, p.134). Theophrastus discusses the making of perfumes and ungunets, and various spices and odors and of the oils used to retain the perfumes... Benoil (balanos) was considered one of the best because it possessed no odor of its own... Olive oil, sesame oil and oil of bitter almonds were also used... some plants used were: frankincense, myrrh, cassia, cinnamon, sweet-marjoram, cardamom, sweet-flag, thyme, myrtle, iris, rose, lily... Pliny refers to "a 'royal' unguent, so-called because it was first composed for the Parthian kings, was composed of myrobalanus, costus, amomum, cinnamon, comacum, cardamum, spikenard, marum, myrrh, cassia, storax, ladanum, opobalsamum, Syrian calamus and Syrian sweet-rush, oenanthe, malobathrum, serichatum, cyprus, aspralathus, panax, saffron, cypirus, sweet marjoram, lotus, honey and wine. Not one of the ingredients in the compound is produced either in Italy...or indeed in all Europe, with the exception of iris, which grows in Illyricum, and the nard which is to be found in Gaul..." (Theophrastus, Enquiry into Plants, (trans.) Sir Arthur Hort, London, 1916, pp.229-233; Pliny, Book XIII, ch.2 (Trans.) Bohn's ed., III, p.166; loc. cit. John Maxson Stillman, The Story of Alchemy and Early Chemistry, 1924, p.23). Sabaei and frankincense: "Of substances referred to in the Bible, which are known to have been used by the Hebrews and other peoples as incense there are: (1) wood-- aloes (eagle-wood); (2) bark -- cassia; cinnamon; (3) roots -- costus; (4) gum resins = balm (?mastic); tragacanth (spicery), balsam (spices), bdellium (galbanum); ladanum (myrrh); stacte; frankincense; (5) flower products -- saffron; spikenard; (6) animal products -- onycha (the operculum of a marine mullusc)... Frankincense (Greek libanwtos, Hebrew l^{e}bho_na_h, Latin olibanum, libanus) is the gum resin of trees of the genus boswellia (boswellia carterii, boswellia frereana, boswellia bhua-dajiana) and is exported from Somaliland, probably the Punt of Egyptian inscriptions. Pliny (Hist. Nat. xii.14ff.) refers to it as a product of Arabia (Hadramaut), and says that the Sabaei alone behold the tree which produces it, and of these only 3000 families by virtue of hereditary succession. The trees are sacred; and, while pruning the trees or gathering the resin, men must not contract pollution by sexual intercourse or contact with a corpse. It is carried to Sabota, where the priests claim a tithe of it in honour of their god Sabis; until this is paid, none of it may be disposed of. Herodotus speaks of winged serpents which guard the trees and are driven off by burning styrax. It was one of the ingredients of Jewish incense, as it is still of that used in Christian ritual. Classical authors, in speaking of frankincense, usually refer to its exporting place as the seat of its origin, e.g. Syria and Phoenicia... flowers are commonly offered to the gods, or scented oils applied to their images. The bodies of the dead are also decked with flowers, aromatic oils, and perfumes... The right to see the species of trees (yielding frankincense) was reserved to certain sacred families. While harvesting the gum they must practise continence and take no part in funerals (Pliny, xii.54). The virtue of the gum lay in its being regarded as the blood of a divine plant... (the name of the incense) among Babylonians was kutrinnu, and the incense-offering consisted of odoriferous woods (cedar, cypress), myrtle, cane, and sweet herbs... Herodotus says that 1000 talents of frankincense were offered on the great altar of Bel at his annual feast, and the author of Is 65 (i.183) refers to Babylon as the land where incense is offered on bricks..." (James Hastings (ed.), Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics, New York, Charles Scribner's sons, 1915, p.201-203). "Incense... ingredients are usually frankincense, styrax, benzoin, and cascarilla bark combined in various proportions. Other substances used are balsam, cinnamon, myrrh, and sandalwood and musk. It is mentioned on an inscribed tablet that was placed on the Sphinx at Giza, Egypt, in about 1530 BC... styrax officinale of Asia yields resinous storax; styrax benzoin of Borneo, Java and Malayan islands yields benzoin." (Frank and Wagnall's Encyclopaedia, MCMLXXI, Vol. 13). "According to Plutarch, the Egyptians burned incense to the sun three times a day; Herodotus recounts that incense was daily burned before an image of a cow. Sacrifices were offered to the pharaoh, and incense was burned before him in the coronation procession. The importance of offering incense is evident from the title of a courtly official, the 'Chief of the House of Incense... In the Mesopotamian Epic of Gilgamesh, Gilgamesh's mother Ninsuna... burned incense and offered it to the god of creation, Shamash, to show her reverence and receive his blessings. As Gilgamesh embarked on his msision to kill the Evil One, Huwawa, he heard the words of his mother and remembered the fragrant aroma of the incense... In the Su_fi sama_' incense is often burned as the dhikr is chanted." (Mircea Eliade (ed.), The Encyclopedia of Religion, New York, Macmillan, 1987, p.162). {There are a number of boswellia species: "...the better known are: in South Arabia, boswellia carteri; in East Africa, boswellia bhaw-dajiana, boswellia carteri, boswellia freerana; in China, boswellia serrata; in Nigeria, boswellia dalzielii, boswellia odorata; the gum resin of boswellia spp., Austria, Denmark, France, Norway, Portugal, Spain; the gum resin of boswellia bhau-sajiana, Austria, Portugal, Spain; the gum resin of boswellia carterii, Austria, Denmark, France, Norway, Portugal, Spain... boswellia serrata ... common on dry hills throughout the greater part of India (except Assam and Burma) ... the bark is sweet, acrid, cooling; binding, tonic; removes 'kapha', biliousness; allays asthma; cures dysentery, skin diseases, ulcers; purifies the blood; the gum is ... useful in skin and blood diseases, fevers, diaphoresis, convulsions, mouth sores, vaginal discharges, 'vata', dysentery, diabetes, and diseases of the testis (Ayurveda). The gum is of five kinds. It is hot, dry, with a good flavour and a bad taste, bitter; astringent to the bowels, expectorant; used for boils, scabies, as a collyrium in ophthalmia; useful in intestinal troubles, bronchitis, asthma, cough, bad throat; heals wounds; strengthens the teeth; invigorating; may cause vomiting. Its distillate in oil is carminative and pectoral (Yunani)... The gum-oleoresin is recommended in combination with other drugs for the treatment of snake-bite (Caraka, Sus'ruta, Yogaratna_kara) and scorpion-sting (Caraka, Sus'ruta). (According to Caius and Mhaskar, the gum resin is not an anti-dote to either snake venom or scorpion-venom). Arabic, bastaj, kundur, luban; Bengal, luban, salai;

2157.Camphor: Dryobalanops aromatica or dryobalanops camphora: This is a tree closely related to the Indian 'sal', and the camphor-tree of Borneo and Sumatra, from which' baros' or 'barus' camphor is derived; bhimseni kapoor, himamaluka (Skt.H.); borneo and sumatra camphor (Eng.); bhimseni kapoor, kacha karpoor (M.); action: diaphoretic, antiseptic, antispasmodic and stimulant. Camphor is obtained from the breaking bark of the tree when 3 years old; taken raw and is not boiled as 'patri-camphor' usually called 'pakwa-kapoor' and China-Japan camphor. Mentioned first in Rajanighan.t.u and its first medicinal uses were found out by the Arabians. (Indian Materia Medica, pp. 466-467). Cinnamomum camphora or camphora officinarum: karpor, ghausar, himavaluka (Skt.); camphor, bhemseni camphor (natural), borneo-camphor (Eng.); kapur (H.Deccan.B.G.M.); karpooram (Te.Ta.Ma.); payo, paronk, piyo (Burmese); karpura, kapooroo (Si.); camphre (Fr.); kampher (Ger.); kafu, kafu, kafoor (Pers.); kaphur (B.); kapoor, karpoor (G.); kapoora (M.); pachai karpooram, karpooran-cheena, karuppuram, karpuram (Ta.); pacha karpooram, cheen karpooram (Te.); kafoor (Arab.U.); habitat: generally imported from China and Japan; parts used: the concrete volatile oil, i.e. camphor (stearoptene) obtained by distillation with water of the wood of the trees or plants... and purified by sublimation. It occurs in translucent white crystals. There are three varieties, viz.: (1) Formosa camphor; (2) Borneo of Barus camphor, known in India as bhimseni kapur; and (3) blumea or ngai camphor. The second variety is highly prized in India and is sold at a very high price. It is naturally formed in the stems of dryobalanops camphora grown in Dutch Sumatra and sinks in water... Camphor is of a very peculiar fragrant and penetrating odour, bitter, pungent, and aromatic taste. It is extremely volatile and inflammable burning with a bright light and muc smoke. It is good in typhus, confluent small-pox and all fevers and eruptions of the typhoid class; also in measles, febrile delirium, whooping cough, hiccup, spasmodic asthma etc. (Indian Materia Medica, pp. 250-253). "Camphor is of two kinds, one called camfora de borneo... it costs as much per pound as camfora de china costs per quintal... (the camphor of Borneo and Sumatra comes from a large tree, dryobalanops aromatica (dryobalanops camphora), of the family of dipterocarpeae... It is gum and not pith that exudes from the tree... capur and cafur are the words used by the Arabs ... " (G. De Orta, pp.86-98). ajakarn.a dipterocarpus sp. (Car. Vi. 8.144). Borneo camphor is a camphor naturally deposited in the clefts and hollows of the wood dryobalanops aromatica. (Heber W. Youngken, Textbook of Pharmacognosy, Philadelphia, The Blakiston Co., 1950, pp. 377). Cinnamomum glanduliferum: nepal camphor wood (Eng.); gunserai (A.); malligiri (N.); habitat: a large tree of the south Himalayas from Kumaon eastwards to Assam, the Khasia hills and Sylhet; parts used: wood and leaves; constituents: wood and the leaves yield a crystalline product which has been shown by Schimmel and Co., to be d-camphor; essential oil; action: stimulant and carminative (Indian Materia Medica, pp. 330-331). Camphor: ka_pu_r camphor (M.); kapu_r (G.S.P.H.B.O.); kapura (Si.); kappura (Pkt.Pali); karpu_ra (Skt.)(Bloch, p. 314).

Natural camphor is a white, dextrorotatory ketone, obtained from the wood of cinnamomum camphora (Fam. lauraceae), a tree which is widely grown in Formosa, Japan and south China; it is also produced commercially in India and Georgia. Synthetic camphor, which is optically inactive, is prepared from turpentine... Borneo camphor is obtained from dryobalanops aromatica, which found its way to Persia in the sixth century and Europe in the twelfth century. When laurel camphor was first prepared is not known... The wood is cut into chips and treated with steam, when a solid sublimate of camphor and liquid volatile oil pass into the receiver... Camphor occurs in small, colourless crystals.. has a characteristic odour and a pungent, aromatic taste, which is followed by a sensation of cold... Uses: Camphor is used externally as a rubefacient, and internally as a mild antiseptic, and carminative. It finds many non-pharmaceutical uses. Large quantities were once used in the manufacture of celluloid. (G.E. Trease and W.C. Evans, Pharmacognosy, 12th edn., London, Bailliere Tindall, 1983, pp. 451). Cinnamon and cinnamon oil: Oil of cinnamon is sometimes called in Britain, cassia oil derived from cassia bark. History: References to aromatic barks of the cinnamon type are abundant in the Old Testament and in ancient Greek and Latin writings... cassia was known in China about 2700 BC... 13th century references... to the collection of cinnamon in Ceylon... In Sri Lanka about 26,000 acres are devoted to cinnamon plantation... The shoots are cut and tops and twigs removed with an instrument known as kathe (catty)... about 50 cm. long. About 20kg of quills per acre will be obtained from the first crop, about 4 years after planting... Boys tie the sticks in bundles with coir string and take them to the peeling shed or wadie near the workers' huts... The peeler uses the brass knife known as kochattetalane... He rings the bark at intervals of about 18 in. and makes two longitudinal slits on opposite sides of the shoot, working the knife under the bark... The separated bark is wrapped in coir matting and allowed to 'ferment' overnight. In the process used for the removal of the outer bark a piece of wood of suitable size is supported at one end by a wall or by means of a small tripod of sticks tied together at the apex. Each piece of bark is placed in turn on the stick and held at its upper end by the scraper's foot while the cork and cortex are removed with the curved ('U'-shaped), known as kochath-gane. The process of making up the quills involves the worker sitting with a board and a measuring stick 42 in. long, to which is attached a wooden lifter known as pethi kotuwa... The compound quill is assembled on the board and, when it has reached the required length, the end is cut off with a pair of scissors and it is gently lifted, with the help of the lifter, on to a mat.... Uses: cinnamon is used as a flavouring agent and mild astringent. The oil has carminative properties and is a powerful germicide. (G.E. Trease and W.C. Evans, Pharmacognosy, 12th edn., London, Bailliere Tindall, 1983, pp. 446-450). karuva_ cinnamon tree, cinnamomum zeylanicum, ilavan:kappat.t.ai maram; cassia cinnamon, cinnamomum macrocarpum; clove tree, eugenia caryophyllata; karuva_-ppat.t.ai cinnamon, the dry bark of cinnamomum zeylanicum (Mu_. A.)(Ta.lex.) 'The earliest Dravidian word in Greek of which we know the date was karpion, Ctesias's word for cinnamon (as heard from his Persian informants as that of a resinous Indian tree). Herodotus describes cinnamon as "the karpheas (dry sticks) which we after the Phoenicians call kinnamomon." Liddel and Scott say: "the word bears a curious likeness to its Arabic name kerfat, kirfah." This resemblance must, I think, be accidental seeing that Herodotus considered "cinnamon" alone as a foreign word... The word mentioned by Ctesias seems, however, to have a real resemblance to the Arabic word and also to a Dravidian one... This word is... karupu or ka_rppu e.g. Malayalam karappa-(t)-tailam "oil of cinnamon"... other forms of this word are karappu, karuva, karuva_ the last of which is the most common in Tamil... derived from the Tamil-Malayalam word karu (black, pungent)... the latter meaning doubtless supplies us with the explanation of karuppu cinnamon.' (Caldwell). qarfah, kerfat (Arabic); karphea (Greek); karuva_ (Ta.) Ctesias was a physician to a king; he says that the Greeks called it myroroda (unguent roses) and refers to its extra-ordinary smell and fragrance, prized as an unguent... Bishop Caldwell's assumption is that Ctesias referred to cinnamon oil... from Malabar trees... Dr. Gundert's Malayalam-English dictionary inverts Caldwell and traces karappa (Ma.) to Greek karphea through the Arabic qarfah... (loc. cit. R. Swaminatha Aiyar, Dravidian Theories, 1922-23, repr., Delhi, Motilal Banarsidass, 1987. pp.114-116).

It is derived from the Sanskrit alphabet, but the letters are so mutilated that it is difficult in some cases to trace their origin. It is very deficien in consonants, having no ng, jh, t.h, d, y or s.; h is generally omitted in writing. The vowels a, i, u appear in the alphabet, but except as initial letters they are omitted in practice. The forms of the letters differ in different towns: kir.aki di likhat d.ilh d.ola hik. In kir.aki writing d.ilh and d.ola are the same (i.e. only d. and l without any vowels, would be used to express both words); kirar., kirar.i a tribe of Hindus also called aror.a. Kirar.s are divided into three main tribes: uttra_dhi (northern), dakhana (southern), and d.a_hra. The first two say they were so named because they fled to the north and south respectively. The origin of d.a_hra is not known. Each main tribe contains numerous sub-divisions, the nomenclature of which defies classification. A few names, as the mat.e and guruwar.a are found in three main tribes; a large number is found in two, and the majority in only one. The main tribes do not intermarry, but the sub-divisions of a main tribe do. They worship either Kr.s.n.a incarnation or the river Ganges or both. They are traders, money lenders and bankers. They have no prejudice against any kind of work, and will sell vegetables or shoes, load donkeys and do other work which an orthodox Hindu would not.
