Indian Lexicon: semantic clusters
General semantic sequencing (using English meanings)

A comprehensive search facility is provided to search for ANY INDIAN WORD or ANY ENGLISH MEANING.

In addition to an advanced search engine presented for the Indian Lexion, the Lexion is presented in three sequences for easy search of Indian lexemes and English meanings: Indian Lexicon

- Semantic clusters (the current page)
- English meanings
- Alphabetical sequence of Indian language lexemes

These are semantic clusters of Indian lexemes. The semantics are derived using English meanings.

The lexicon provides semantic clusters from Indian languages closely approximating each English meaning listed.

- The organization of the semantic clusters is intended to facilitate speedy downloading and browsing of each semantic cluster.
- The resulting page presents the Indian lexemes using a simple transliteration rules. [Phonetic guide (Basic sounds of the language)]

Indian Lexicon
DEDICATED TO: PA_N.INI and TOLKA_PPIYAN-
Dr. S. Kalyanaraman 11 May 1998.

The author assumes full responsibility for the semantic and etymological judgements made and the errors that might have crept in with thousands of database iterations in organizing the semantic clusters found in the word lists (The lexicon includes over half-a-million Indian words). The author is indebted to Prof. Krishnamurthy who first observed from a review (1994) of an earlier draft of the Lexion (alphabetially sequenced) that the model of Carl Darling Buck's work for Indo-European languages may also be adapted. The author hopes that with the impossibility of 'dating' the origin of a word, all its inherent limitations, the omissions, intentional or otherwise and errors that will in due course be pointed out by scholars specialized in their fields, the Indian Lexicon will be a tentative, but bold start of a skeleton dictionary of the Indian linguistic area ca. 3000 B.C. and will be expanded further to include modern words.

Indian Lexicon

Organizing (Clustering) the lexemes of all Indian Languages

For a perspective on the philological issues see:

An introduction Discovering the language of India ca. 3000 B.C. (65 kb.)

This is a lexicon with a difference. It is a comparative semantic (sic) lexicon of synonyms from Indian languages. See list of the languages of India surveyed in the Indian Lexicon.

Indian Lexicon goes beyond the concept of a comparative lexicon or an etymological dictionary.

It is a search for synonyms in ancient forms of Indian languages. Hence, it may be called a semantic lexicon and not an etymological lexicon. This search has taken the compiler 20 years to accomplish using a powerful computer processor to compile the database of semantic clusters, working on an average, for 4 hours daily.

The lexemes of all Indian languages are organized in two major categories:

- Alphabetical sequence

The Dravidian Etymological Dictionary (DEDR) uses the order of the Tamil alphabet to seqauence etymological groups, assuming Proto-Dravidian phonemes in the reconstructed PDr roots or stems involved, with the order of the Tamil alphabet applied of these phonemes. Tamil phonemes do not serve as PD reconstructions in all cases. The Indian Lexicon is a first step towards the compilation of an Indian Etymological Dictionary. Proto-Indic construction of phonemes of Proto-Indic roots or stems involved has not been attempted. Lexemes from the Indian languages are clustered based primarily on 'semantics' and secondarily on 'phonetis'. The Comparative Dictionary of Indo-Aryan Languages (CDIAL) provides many reconstructions of Proto-Indo-Aryan phonemes prefixing the root or stem involved with an * as has beeen attempted, in superb other works in philology, for the reconstruction of Indo-European etyma.

- Semantic sequence

The semantic problem has been handled vigorously and the Indian Lexicon includes many borrowings among and between languages. This approach has resulted in clustering as many as over 3000 etymological groups of DEDR with the comparative groups of CDIAL, together with thousands of lexemes of Santali, Mundarica and other languages of the Austro-Asiatic linguistic group. There could be many opinions among linguists on semantic developments of a language. It is assumed that there were homophones in a Proto-Indic language which was the lingua franca of the Sarasvati-Sindhu civilization, ca. 2500 B.C.; this assumption, coupled with the Mesopotamian links, provides some hope for deciphering the inscriptions of the Sarasvati (Indus) Script.

A note is appended which recounts Prof. Emeneau's postulation of an Indian Linguistic Area, together with some briefs on the key dates related to the desiccation of the Sarasvati River.(Note on Key dates of the Sarasvati River and the Indian Linguistic Area) This provides the underpinnings for a hypothesis that many entries in this Indian Lexicon are likely to provide the phonemes which were current for a millennium, starting circa 3000 B.C. This hypothesis will be tested by an attempt to decipher the inscriptions of the civilization which sustained the Indian Linguistic Area.

The semantic sequence provided in the Indian Lexicon is like a meta-index of English meanings, using synonyms or near-synonyms of basic English words, while trying to separate English homonyms or near-homonyms. Botanical names (primarily Latin) have been used ater Hooker to index flora, though some entries are also sequenced in the context of sememes related to cultural processes, for e.g. 'food'.

- Search facility

In addition to the alphabetic and semantic sequences, a general search facility is also provided. This search can be performed using ANY INDIAN WORD or ANY ENGLISH MEANING. While entering the Indian word (from any language), the simple transliteration rules have to be observed which will be obvious from a cursory review of the Indian Lexicon clusters.

There are over 8300 semantic clusters included in the Indian Lexicon from over 25 languages which makes the work very large. Hence, to render the search faster, a meta-index has been constructed.

For the purposes of the preliminary decipherment effort, a search within the Semantic sequence lists using the search facilities provided on the Browser tool bar (Netscape or Internet Explorer) should be adequate.

Organizing (Clustering) the lexemes of Indian languages

Elucidates the method used to organize the synonyms in alphabetic, semantic sequences and to facilitate comprehensive searches for ANY INDIAN LANGUAGE WORD OR ANY ENGLISH MEANING.

An Overview and Objectives

This is a comparative study of the 'semantics' of lexemes of all the languages of India (which may also be referred to, in a geographical/ historical phrase, as the Indian linguistic area). The objective of the lexicon is to discover the semantic repertoire of India ca. 3000 B.C. to further facilitate efforts at deciphering the inscriptions and script of the Sarasvati-Sindhu civilization.

The Indian Lexicon establishes an Indian Linguistic Area, ca. 3000 B.C. by authenticating the use of the lexemes for inscriptions of the civilization of the ancient period.

This Indian lexicon seeks to establish a semantic concordance, across the languages or numeraire facile of the Indian linguistic area: from Brahui to Santali to Bengali, from Kashmiri to Mundarica to Sinhalese, from Marathi to Hindi to Nepali, from Sindhi or Punjabi or Urdu to Tamil. A semantic structure binds the languages of India, which may have diverged morphologically or phonologically as evidenced in the oral tradition of Vedic texts, or epigraphy, literary works or lexicons of the historical periods. This lexicon, therefore, goes beyond, the commonly held belief of an Indo-European language and is anchored on proto-Indian sememes.

The work covers over 8,300 semantic clusters which span and bind the Indian languages. The basic finding is that thousands of terms of the Vedas, the Munda languages (e.g., Santali, Mundarica, Sora; cf. Munda lexemes in Sanskrit)(37 kb.), the so-called Dravidian languages and the so-called Indo-Aryan languages have common roots. This belies the received wisdom of cleavage between, for example, the Dravidian or Munda and the Aryan languages.

The idea of a semantic dictionary

Carl Darling Buck, A dictionary of selected synonyms in the principal Indo-European languages: a contribution to the history of ideas, 1949, Univ. of Chicago Press. "The associations underlyng semantic changes are so complex that no rigid classification of the latter is possible. Many changes may be variously viewed. In a sense, each word has its individual semantic history... in the history of words for domestic animals the conspicuous feature is the frequent interchange between classes of the same species, as when words of the same cognate group denote in different languages 'bull', 'ox', or 'cow', and in another species 'ram, wether', or 'lamb', or show a shift from 'wether', through an intermediate generic use, to 'ewe'. "Semantic borrowing" refers to the borrowing not of the formal word but of some special meaning. There are, of course, great numbers of actual loanwords, some in Greek from pre-Greek sources, many in Latin from Greek, still more in most of the European languages from Latin or in many cases more specifically from Frenh; again from early Germanic and later from German in Balto-Slavic and from Slavic in Rumanian. But besides these there are "translation words". A special use of a familiar foreign word was adopted for the usually corresponding native word. Thus Lat. na_vis 'ship' came to be used in Christian times for the 'nave' of a church... Semantic word study may proceed from two opposite points of view, form or meaning. For example, on may study the history of Lat. di_cere 'say' and its cognates in Latin, or, with enlarged scope, its cognates in all the Indo-European languages; in other words the diverse uses of derivatives of the Indo-European root *deik- and its probable sense. Such is the material brought together in the etymological dictionaries of the usual type. Conversely, one may start from the notion 'say' and study the history of words used to express it in different languages... By the study of synonyms, their etymology and semantic history, one seeks to show the various sources of a given notion, the trails of its evolution... also presents an interesting picture of word distribution... Even for the Indo-European field anything like a complete semantic dictionary is beyond probable realization at present... The specialist can recognize these, and at the same time is aware of how of how large a proportion of the current etymologies, even in most of the best etymological dictionaries, are uncertain, with varying degrees of probability or plausibility... and it is best to let the facts speak for themselves in each case."

Sememes (213 kb.)

"Sememe [sememic(s)] is a term used in SEMANTIC theories to refer to a minimal UNIT of MEANING. For some, a sememe is equivalent to the meaning of a MORPHEME; for others it is a FEATURE of meaning, equivalent to the notion of 'semantic COMPONENT' or 'semantic feature' in some theories. The term sememics is used as part of the description of strata in STRATIFICATIONAL GRAMMAR; the 'sememic stratum', which handles the SYSTEMS of semantic relationship between LEXICAL ITEMS, is here distinguished from the HYPERSEMEMIC stratum, at which is analysed the relationship between LANGUAGE and the external world. SEMOTACTICS, in this approach, involves the study of SEQUENTIAL arrangement of sememes.

See Robins 1980: Ch.8." (David Crystal, A Dictionary of Linguistics and Phonetics, Blackwell, 1991).

These sememes should be distinguished from dha_tus or verb roots since the radicals span both nouns and verbs and also include attributive thoughts connoted, for example, by adjectives.

Sememes are clustered in the Indian Lexicon more like classemes (a term used by some European linguists, e.g. Eugene Coseriu, to refer to the relatively abstract SEMANTIC FEATURES shared by LEXICAL items belonging to different semantic FIELDS, e.g. animate/inanimate, adult/child. The term contrasts with the irreducible semantic features (SEMES) which work, at a very particular level, within a particular semantic field, e.g. table being identified in terms of 'number of legs', 'shape', etc. (See Lyons 1977: Ch.9)

Many sememes are from Sanskrit which re-inforced the development of the literary structures of historical periods of all the languages flowing from proto-Indian lingua franca. CDIAL (with comparative etymological groups collected over a period of 40 years until 1966) provides thousands of possible derivations or phonological reconstructions of 'old Indo-aryan form' in Sanskrit, within its 14,845 head-words. A magnificent attempt was made in the past by linguists of unsurpassed erudition, to identify the sememes of Indian languages. A notable result was the formation and delineation of the grammatical rules of the Sanskrit language.

Indian Lexicon establishes that over 3000 etyma of the Dravidian Etymological Dictionary (DEDR) have concordant sememes in the lexemes of Indo-Aryan and Munda languages, thus negating the linguists' differentiation of the Dravidian tongues from the Indo-Aryan and Munda language streams.

The Indus (Sarasvati-Sindhu) Script decipherment problem

Many lexemes will be dated to circa 3000 B.C., when the most expansive civilization of the times flourished in thousands of settlement sites in the Sarasvati-Sindhu doab. This dating for the selected lexemes is based on a suggested rebus/semantic clustering method to decipher the script of the civilization. The underlying language may be called the Indian; hence, the lexicon is called "An Indian Lexicon".

A paradigm change is posited that circa 3000 B.C., the Indo-Aryan, Dravidian and Munda sub-families of languages had not been differentiated fully. This hypothesis has to be validated further through more linguistic/lexical studies.Etyma in Niruktam (25 kb.)

Roots (Dha_tupa_t.ha) (156 kb.)

Dha_tupa_t.ha (lit. a study of roots or verb forms) reputedly by Pa_n.ini provides a list of 2200 roots (in ten technical classes) with almost all irregular and noteworthy forms which can be expanded in the series of active, passive, casual desiderative and derivative groups.

The classification of verbal bases in the following ten classes is based on vikaran.a the inserted conjugational affix, the conjugational sign placed between the root and the terminations.Verb forms (Whitney) (42 kb.)

The roots, verb-forms, and primary derivatives of the Sanskrit language : A supplement to his Sanskrit grammar.

Whitney's work lists all the quotable roots of the Sanskrit language together with the tense and conjugation-systems made from them, the noun and adjective (infinitival and participal) formations that attach themselves most closely to the verb and with the other derivative noun and adjective-stems usually classed as primary. "... since etymology is from beginning to end a matter of balancing probabilities, and thick-set with uncertainties and chances of error. It has been my intention to err rather upon the side of liberality of inclusion than the opposite... main intent is to furnish the means of examining in their chronologic entirety the groups of words and forms that cluster about the so-called roots in Sanskrit, that they may be studied, and have their relations determined, witth more complete understanding... The meanings added after the roots by no means claim to be exhaustive; they are in general intended only to identify the root... The classes of (verb-)forms that contain the most puzzling problems are the reduplicated ones, and the present stems ending in ya..." (Whitney, 1885, pp. v to xiii).

Munda lexemes in Sanskrit (Munda Etyma edited by D. Stampe annexed)

[From F.B.J. Kuiper, Proto-Munda Words in Sanskrit, Amsterdam, Verhandeling der Koninklijke Nederlandsche Akademie Van Wetenschappen, Afd. Letterkunde, Nieuwe Reeks Deel Li, No. 3, 1948]

Some hundred Sanskrit and Prakrit words are shown to be derived from the Proto-Munda branch of the Austro-Asiatic source. The term 'Proto-Munda' is used to indicate that the Munda languages had departed considerably from the Austro-Asiatic type of language as early as the Vedic period... a process of 'Dravidization' of the Munda tongues... contributing to the growth of the Indian linguistic leagu (sprachbund). Professor C.C. Berg had suggested that the Austro-Asiatic consonantal system had a relatively small number of phonemes with a wide range of possible realizations, the following sounds, for instance originally having constituted one phoneme: d/t, dh/th, r, j/c, s, d./t., d.h/t.h, r., z./s. = y = l... Santali evidences rhyme words, e.g. but.ra, gut.ra; dun.d.ga, mun.d.ga which may explain varying initial gutturals, dentals and labials in synonyms... Another proto-Munda phenomenon inherited from prim. Austric is the nasalization and prenasalization of the consonants of a root. Thus ba-da (wa-da) may become ba-nda, ba-na, ma-da, ma-nda, ma-na... the vowels are largely interchangeable... a very considerable amount (say some 40%) of the New Indo-Aryan vocabulary is borrowed from Munda, either via Sanskrit (and Prakrit), or via Prakrit alone, or directly from Munda; wide-branched and seemingly native, word-families of South Dravidian are of Proto-Munda origin; in Vedic and later Sanskrit, the words adopted have often been Aryanized, resp. Sanskritized. "In view of the intensive interrelations between Dravidian, Munda and Aryan dating from pre-Vedic times even individual etymological questions will often have to be approached from a Pan-Indic point of view if their study is to be fruitful. It is hoped that this work may be helpful to arrive at this all-embracing view of the Indian languages, which is the final goal of these studies." (p. 9).

Sememes: Indian

In the following vocabulary, some sememic and morphemic compounds are also included to illustrate the nature of phonemic transforms, while sustaining the substratum of semantic structures (e.g. gaun.d.a_ cowherd station; field near a village; goe~r. belt of land nearest homestead). Sememes, with possible phonemic variants, are listed under one 'semantic' group [e.g. gad. drip; gal drip]. This is the reason for not following a strict syllabic order in the list. The list includes words from south Asian languages without attempting to guess their proto-indic forms with an '*'.

These sememes should be distinguished from dha_tus or verb roots since the radicals span both nouns and verbs and also include attributive thoughts connoted, for example, by adjectives.

Many sememes listed in the following vocabulary are from Sanskrit which re-inforced the development of the literary structures of historical periods of all the languages flowing from proto-South Asian lingua franca. CDIAL (with comparative etymological groups collected over a period of 40 years until 1966) provides thousands of possible derivations or phonological reconstructions of 'old Indo-aryan form' in Sanskrit, within its 14,845 head-words. A magnificent attempt was made in the past by linguists of unsurpassed erudition, to identify the sememes of Indian languages. A notable result was the formation and delineation of the grammatical rules of the Sanskrit language [sam.skr.ta put together, completed (RV.); sakkhata put together, cooked, embellished (Pali); saku Sanskrit (Si.)].

S'a_kat.a_yana holds that nouns are derived from verbs. This, too, is the doctrine of etymologists. 'Not all,' say Gargya and some of the grammarians, 'but only those, the accent and grammatical form of which are regular and which are accompanied by an explanatory radical modification. Those (nouns), such as cow, horse, man, elephant, etc. are conventional (terms and hence are underivable).' (Nir. 1.12).

tvis.itah. shining (Nir. 1.17)

'But the meaning being irrelevant, and the explanatory radical modification being non-existent, one should always examine them with regard to their meaning, by the analogy of some (common) course of action.' (Nir. 2.1).

pr.s.atah. (prus., a drop) (Nir. 2.2)

'...Vedic primary nouns are derived from roots of classical Sanskrit, as damu_na_h. (devoted to the house), ks.etravasa_dha_h. (one who divides the fields), etc.; and also nouns of classical Sanskrit from Vedic roots, as us.n.am (warm), ghr.tam (clarified butter). Further, primary forms alone are employed (in speech) among some people; secondary forms among others. The verb s'avati, meaning to go, is used by the Kambojas only. Kambojas (are so called because) they enjoy blankets (kambala), or beautiful things. A blanket (kambala) is a desirable object (kamani_ya). Its modified form s'ava is used by the Aryans; da_ti, in the sense of cut, is employed by the people of the east, while the people of the north use da_tra (sickle). In this manner, one should explain single words.' (Nir. 2.2).

'In the beginning of the creation, Manu, the self-existent, declared himself that according to law the right of inheritance belongs to both children (the son and the daughter) without any distinction (whatsoever)[cf. Manu, ix. 130,133,139]...Now (some lawgivers) cite the following stanza (in support) of their denial of a daughter's right to inheritance. Some are of the opinion that the major share belongs to the (appointed) daughter...The legitimate son did not leave wealth for his sister. He made her the place of depositing the seed of her husband. If the mothers have engendered offspring, one is the performer, and the other is the director of good deeds...' (Nir. 3.4 and 3.5).

'Soma is a plant; the word is derived from (the root) su (to press): it is pressed again and again. Its character (as a deity) is mostly secondary and only rarely primary. In order to point out its (primary use) in the hymns relating to soma-juice while it is being purified, we shall quote...be pure with thy sweetest and most gladdening stream. O soma, thou art pressed for Indra to drink. The stanza is explained by the mere reading of it. Now here is another stanza addressed to him or to the moon, as follows. Because they grind the herbs together, one thinks that he has drunk the soma. Of the soma which the Bra_hman.as know, none whatsoever partakes...' (Nir. 11.2; 11.3; 11.4). cf. 'The meaning of expressions of the Vedic Sanskrit and of the popular speech is not different: va_kya_rtho_ lo_kave_dayo_ravis'is.t.ah (Pu_. Mi_i.1.31)... abhidha_ne_ rthava_dah.: there is a figurative description in such expressions (of describing such lifeless things as grass, stones, and axe as if they were living beings)' (Sayan.a's preface, p.3);'There is no such contradiction, because even one Rudra by his greatness can take on a thousand forms...gun.a_davipratis.e_dhah. sya_t: 'on account of the figurative description, there will be no contradiction' (Pu_. Roots (Dha_tupa_t.ha)

Dha_tupa_t.ha (lit. a study of roots or verb forms) reputedly by Pa_n.ini provides a list of 2200 roots (in ten technical classes) with almost all irregular and noteworthy forms which can be expanded in the series of active, passive, casual desiderative and derivative groups.

About 2200 roots are grouped into ten classes which are sub-divided into two groups based on conjugational terminations. There are two main divisions of terminations: parasmaipadi and atmanepadi. In Sanskrit the tenses and moods are divided into two categories : the conjugational and non-conjugational; this division determines the peculiar modification the root should undergo.

The classification of verbal bases in the following ten classes is based on vikaran.a the inserted conjugational affix, the conjugational sign placed between the root and the terminations:

I. s'abvikaran.o_bhva_digan.ah

[s'ap a technical term used by Pa_n.ini for the conjugational sign a inserted between the root and the terminations of the conjugational tenses in the first class of roots.]

II. lugvikaran.o_da_di gan.a

[luk a technical term used by Pa_n.ini to express the dropping or disappearance of affixes.]

III. s'lu-vikaran.o_juho_tya_digan.a

IV. s'yan vikaran.o_diva_digan.a

V. s'nu-vikaran.ah-sva_digan.a

[s'nu a technical term used by Pa_n.ini for nu the sign of the 5th class of roots.]

VI. s'a-vikaran.astuda_digan.a

VIII. u-vikaran.astana_digan.a

IX. s'na_-vikaran.a r.ya_digan.a

[s'na_ a technical term used by Pa_n.ini for na_, the sign of the 9th class of roots]

X. n.ijantas'cura_digan.a

I. s'abvikaran.o_bhva_digan.a [s'ap a technical term used by Pa_n.ini for the conjugational sign a inserted between the root and the terminations of the conjugational tenses in the first class of roots; vikaran.a the inserted conjugational affix, the conjugational sign placed between the root and the terminations]

[The list is principally based on Siddha_nta-kaumudi_. (cf. Siddha_nta-kaumudi_ of Bhat.t.ojidi_ks.ita) The verb roots in ten classes are taken from: P. V. Upa_dhye, Dha_turu_pa Chandrika_ with the Dha_tupa_t.ha of Pa_n.ini containing all irregular and noteworthy forms, Bombay, Gopal Narayen and Co., 1927, 2nd edn.]

Verb forms (Whitney)

Whitney, William Dwight, The roots, verb-forms, and primary derivatives of the Sanskrit language : A supplement to his Sanskrit grammar, Leipzig, Breitkopf and Hartel, London, Trubner and Co., 1885. cf. Whitney's critical comments on Dha_tupa_t.ha in Whitney, William D., "The Study of Hindu Grammar and the Study of Sanskrit", American Journal of Philology, 5, pp. 279-297, 1884 : "... more than half (of about two thousand roots) never have been met with... in the Sanskrit literature of any age... The skilled students of native grammar... have been trying to put the non-existent grammarian's dialect in the place of the genuine Sanskrit."

Whitney's work lists all the quotable roots of the Sanskrit language together with the tense and conjugation-systems made from them, the noun and adjective (infinitival and participal) formations that attach themselves most closely to the verb and with the other derivative noun and adjective-stems usually classed as primary. "... since etymology is from beginning to end a matter of balancing probabilities, and thick-set with uncertainties and chances of error. It has been my intention to err rather upon the side of liberality of inclusion than the opposite... main intent is to furnish the means of examining in their chronologic entirety the groups of words and forms that cluster about the so-called roots in Sanskrit, that they may be studied, and have their relations determined, witth more complete understanding... The meanings added after the roots by no means claim to be exhaustive; they are in general intended only to identify the root... The classes of (verb-)forms that contain the most puzzling problems are the reduplicated ones, and the present stems ending in ya..." (Whitney, 1885, pp. v to xiii).

Introduction:
An Indian Lexicon

Discovery of the language of a civilization

This is a comparative lexicon covering all the languages of India (which may also be referred to, in a geographical/historical phrase, as the Indian subcontinent).
This lexicon seeks to establish a semantic concordance, across the languages or nume'raire facile1 of the Indian sub-continent: from Brahui to Santali to Bengali, from Kashmiri to Mundarica to Sinhalese, from Marathi to Hindi to Nepali, from Sindhi or Punjabi or Urdu to Tamil. A semantic structure binds the languages of India, which may have diverged morphologically or phonologically as evidenced in the oral tradition of Vedic texts, or epigraphy, literary works or lexicons of the historical periods. This lexicon,therefore, goes beyond, the commonly held belief of an Indo-European language2 and is anchored on proto-Indian sememes3.

1Or easy currency, to use the eloquent phrase of Mallarme'; this phrase is comparable to another monetary (!) metaphor: 'borrowing' used in comparative linguistics. A superb example of 'easy currency' is provided by the Indian Epigraphical Glossary. Some selected terms used in epigraphy of Indian languages are listed in this lexicon. This list provides evidence of the degrees of freedom enjoyed by the writers of inscriptions to depict in a variety of scripts, the phonetics (or 'easy currency') underlying many economic transactions.

2'A genetic relationship between the classical languages, Greek, Latin,and Sanskrit, was identified in the late eighteenth century by Sir WilliamJones, who correctly postulated a 'common source' for these three languages,and suggested that Celtic, Iranian and Germanic might well be connected. The genetic relationship was first scientifically codified and set out on a comparative basis by Franz Bopp, whose major work -- Vergleichende Grammatik des Sanskrit, Zend, Armenischen, Griechischen, Lateinischen, Lithauischen, Altslawischen, Gothischen und Deutschen-- was published in 1833. ('Zend' in Bopp's title refers to Avestan)...' (George L. Campbell, Compendium of the World's Languages, Routledge, London, 1991, p.610).

3 In philology, as in archaeology, the search for 'truth' is an extension of a researcher's imagination. Imagination is not an act of faith, but a statement of hypothesis based on relational entities in linguistic structures identified through painstaking lexical work. Two such entities in linguistic structures are: morpheme and sememe which bind an etymological group. Sememe may be defined as a phoneme imbued with 'meaning'. Morpheme is defined as a 'meaningful' linguistic unit. Sememe constitutes the semantic substratum of a morpheme or simply, 'meaning'. What is 'meaning'? It is a concept closely linked to a social compact for inter-personal communication. The 'private language' of a speaker's brain (with 'personal' experiences embedded in neural networks) is revealed through sounds uttered by the speaker. Language is formed if these uttered sounds echo the 'private language' of a listener. Such an echo constitutes meaning or the semantic sub-structure of a language. Sememes are the basic semantic structural units of a language which combine to yield morphemes or words. A sememe can, for example, be distinguished from a phoneme or a gesture which does not communicate a message in a social compact. Only those uttered sounds which are heard and accepted in a social compact can constitute the repertoire of a language. Sememes (or, dha _tupada's) are given a variety of phonemic and morphological forms in the lingua franca to constitute semantic expressions, or the vocabulary of an evolving and growing civilization.

The work covers over 8,000 semantic clusters which span and bind the Indian languages. The basic finding is that thousands of terms of the Vedas, the Munda languages (e.g., Santali, Mundarica, Sora), the so-called Dravidian languages and the so-called Indo-Aryan languages have common roots. This belies the received wisdom of cleavage between, for example, the Dravidian or Munda and the Aryan languages.

The lexicon seeks to establish an areal 'Indian' language type, by establishing semantic concordance among the so-called Indo-Aryan, Dravidian and Munda languages. The area spanned is a geographical region bounded by the Indian ocean on the south and the mountain ranges which insulate it from other regions of the Asian continent on the north, east and west.

This lexicon is a tribute to the brilliant work done by etymologists4 and scholars of Indian linguistics, and to a number of scholars who have contributed to unravelling the enigma5 of the Indus Script and to the study of ancient Indian science and technology.

The author believes that the work can contribute to/strengthen the unifying elements of Indian common cultural heritage and counter divisive forces which occasionally hold sway. The author also realizes that language is an extraordinarily emotional issue and is subject to a variety of possible interpretations. Language is also a philosophical problem par excellence. The justification for this comparative lexicon of languages currently spoken by over a billion people of the world can be provided at a number of levels: (1) to bring people closer to the ancient heritage of a Indian language family of which the extant Indian languages (Indo-Aryan, Dravidian and Munda language streams) are but dialectical forms; 4Etymology has been defined as the 'origin, formation, and development (of a word)...(and) as a branch of grammar dealing with forms...étumon (French) literal sense of a word, original form, primary or basic word.....' (The Oxford Lexicon of English Etymology, 1985).

5 Obscure speech or writing. The orthography of the Indus Script is vivid and symmetric and is used to convey cryptic messages. Each message on seals (many with cord holes, and probably worn visibly by their owners), tablets, copper plates, pottery, bangles etc. uses, generally, between one to about six signs. The sign sequences are frequently superimposed on a field symbol or pictograph. The signs include glyphs such as svastika _ , dotted circles, short and long linear strokes. The principal enigma is the speech which the script depicted!

(2) to generate further studies in the disciplines of (i) Indian archaeology, (ii) general semantics and comparative linguistics; (iii) design of fifth-generation computer systems6; and (3) to provide a basis for further studies in grammatical philosophy and neurosciences on the formation of semantic patterns or structures in the human brain -- neurosciences related to the study of linguistic competence which seems to set apart the humans from other living beings. The urgent warrant for this work is the difficulty faced by scholars in collating different lexicons and in obtaining works such as CDIAL (A Comparative Dictionary of Indo-Aryan Languages) even in eminent libraries. In tracing the etyma (lit. truth in Greek) of the Indian languages, it is adequate to indicate the word forms which can be traced into the mists of history7.

6 These computer systems are in the realm of artificial intelligence or approaches to the design of computer systems which can 'learn' from experience. It may be, hypothesized that sememes are recorded as 'ideographs' neuronally linking 'perceived images' or 'felt experiences' with 'phonetic formants'. It is notable that early scripts were 'ideographic'. It is also notable that the linguistic competence of a human child builds upon the linguistic faculties of the brain within one to two years after birth, with layers of inter-locked sensory perceptions including 'heard' sounds, until the vocal cords are developed to 'repeat' such sounds, as recollections of 'experiences' of the child's development. 7Some observations of ancient historians are instructive: "there are many nations among the Indians, and they don't speak the same language" (Herodotus, Historiae 3.98). Hsuan Tsang (602-664 A.D.): "The letters of their alphabet were arranged by the god Brahma _ , and their forms have been handed down from the first till now. They are forty-seven in number, and are combined so as to form words according to the object, and according to circumstances (of time or place): there are other forms (inflexions) used. This alphabet has spread in different directions and formed diverse branches, according to circumstances; therefore there have been slight modifications in the sounds of the words (spoken language); but in its great features there has been no change. Middle India preserves the original character of the language in its integrity. Here the pronunciation is soft and agreeable, and like the language of the Devas. The pronunciation of the words is clear and pure, and fit as a model for all men. The people of the frontiers have contracted several erroneous modes of pronunciation; for according to the licentious habits of the people, so also will be the corrupt nature of their language... (the young in India are instructed from the age of seven in five sciences (vidya _), of which)... thefirst is called the elucidation of sounds (s'abdavidya_). This treatise explains and illustrates the agreement (concordance) of words, and it provides an index for derivatives."(Beale, Samuel (trans.)(1885). Si-yu-ki. Buddhist Records of

Hypotheses on Indian vocabulary

I. It is possible to re-construct a proto-Indian idiom or lingua franca of circa the centuries traversed by the Indus valley civilization (c. 2500 to 1700 B.C.). II. India is a linguistic area nurtured in the cradle of the Indus Valley civilization. The hypotheses reject two earlier linguistic assertions: (i) Sir William Jones's assertion in 1786 of an Indo-European linguistic family and (ii) Francis Whyte Ellis's assertion in 1816 of a southern Indian family of languages. These two assertions have resulted in two comparative or etymological dictionaries of the so-called 'Indo-Aryan' and 'Dravidian' languages. This cleavage between the two language families is rejected. The exclusion of the so-called Austro-Asiatic or Munda (or Kherwa _ri) languages is also rejected. Instead, it is proposed that there was a proto-Indian linguistic area (c. 2500 B.C.) which included these three language groups. The underlying assumption is that the so-called Dravidian, Munda and Aryan the Western World, by Hsuan Tsang, Vol. 1, Boston). Abu_Raih-a _n al-Biru_ni (973-1048 A.D.): :"The Hindus and their like boast of this copiousness, whilst in reality it is one of the greatest faults of the language. For it is the task of language to give a name to everything in creation and to its effects, a name based on general consent, so that everybody, when hearing this name pronounced by another man, understands what he means. If therefore one and the same name or word means a variety of things, it betrays a defect of the language and compels the hearer to ask the speaker what he means by the word. And thus the word in question must be dropped in order to be replaced either by a similar one of a sufficiently clear meaning, or by an epithet describing what is really meant. If one and the same thing is called by many names, and this is not occasioned by the fact that every tribe or class uses a separate one of them, and if in fact, one single name would be sufficient, all other names save this one are to be classified as mere nonsense, as a means of keeping people in the dark, and throwing an air of mystery about the subject. And in any case this copiousness offers painful difficulties to those who want to learn the whole of the language, for it is entirely useless, and only results in a sheer waste of time... (another reason for the differences between Muslims and Hindus is that)... the (Hindus') language is divided into a neglected vernacular one, only in use among the common people, and a classical one, only in use among the upper and educated classes, which is much cultivated, and subject to the rules of grammatical inflection and etymology, and to all the niceties of grammar and rhetoric..." Sachau, Edward C. (trans.)(1910). Al-Bi_ru_ni's India. An Account of the Religion, Philosophy, Literature, Geography, Chronology, Astronomy, Customs, Laws and Astrology of India, Vols. I-II, London).

languages can be traced to an ancient Indian family by establishing the unifying elements, in semantic terms. This echoes Pope's observations made in a different context: '... that between the languages of Southern India and those of the Aryan family there are many deeply seated and radical affinities; that the differences between the Dravidian tongues and the Aryan are not so great as between the Celtic (for instance) and the Sanskrit8; 8"The Sanskrit language, whatever may be its antiquity, is of a wonderful structure; more perfect than the Greek, more copious than the Latin, and more exquisitely refined than either, yet bearing to both of them a stronger affinity, both in the roots of a verb and in the forms of grammar, than could possibly have been produced by accident; so strong indeed that no philologer could examine them all three, without believing them to have sprung from some common source, which, perhaps no longer exists; there is a similar reason, though not quite so forcible, for supposing that both the Gothic and the Celtic, though blended with a very different idiom, had the same origin with the Sanskrit; and the old Persian might be added to the same family, if this were the place for discussing any question concerning the antiquities of Persia." (Jones, Sir W., 1786, reprint in Jones 1807, and in Lehmann 1967, pp. 7-20; 'Third Anniversary Discourse' to the Asiatic Society of Bengal).

and that, by consequence, the doctrine that the place of the Dravidian dialects is rather with the Aryan than with the Turanian family of languages is still capable of defence... the resemblances (appeared) most frequently in the more uncultivated Dravidian dialects... the identity (was) most striking in the names of instruments, places, and acts connected with a simple life...' (G.U.Pope, Indian Antiquary; loc. cit. R. Swaminatha Aiyar, Dravidian Theories, 1922-23, repr., Delhi, Motilal Banarsidass, 1987, pp.11-12).

Methodology and limitations of the work

The methodology to test the hypotheses will be based on the design of a vocabulary super-set (in semantic terms). The governing principle of this lexicon is that phonetic and grammatical laws are subordinate to semantic laws within a language family. Cognates do not have to be concordant in phonetic and morphological forms; cognates have to be concordant in phonetic and semantic forms to suggest linguistic affinity among dialects of a language family. To quote, Tolka_ppiyam, "ella_c collum porul. kur-ittan-ave (Tol. Col.Peya. 1), i.e. all words are semantic indicators.

The compounded forms of sememes of the lingua franca of the Indus Valley civilization have been reconstructed from the following sources: * lexical entries of Indian languages found in the comparative, etymological dictionaries: CDIAL (A Comparative Dictionary of Indo-Aryan Languages) and DEDR (A Dravidian Etymological Lexicon); * etymological groups (as semantic super-sets) culled from (a) lists of ancient verb forms such as those found in the dha_tupa_t.ha, Niruktam, Whitney's lexicon, Vedic lexicon; (b) lists of ancient noun forms, such as materia medica found in nighan.t.u's and medical works, annotated with insights from botanical works, pharmacopoeia and works on pharmacognosy ; (c) epigraphical records of many languages of the region which mainly record economic transactions; and (d) language dictionaries of Indian languages.

This lexicon is organized primarily on a comparative basis and secondarily on a historical basis (and not on a genealogical basis, i.e. not trying to trace the changes in phonetic forms of a sememe)9. Given the limitations of this organization, it has not been considered essential in this lexicon, to reformulate the old Indian phonetic form with an *

10. The vocabulary is presented in groups of etyma taken from CDIAL, DEDR, Tamil and other language lexicons of Dravidian, Aryan and Munda languages. The etymological groups are put together as semantic cognates and it will be left for future research work to determine the nature of the interactions (or what linguists call, using a pecuniary term: 'borrowing') between and among the languages which constituted the proto-Indian linguistic area. The results of the research are restricted to the identification, in a comparative lexicon, of comparative sememes and morphemes, including many allomorphs (i.e. two or more forms of a morpheme). An attempt to conjecture or decipher the possible proto-Indian 'phonetic' forms will require further studies and research work. The results of these studies will help for e.g. (1) to eliminate duplicate semantic clusters included in this lexicon and (2) to re-group the clusters in a true syllabic sequence

11. 9anantapa_ram kila s'abdas'a_stram. svalpam tatha_yur bhavas' ca vighna_h- sa_ram. tato gra_hyam apa_sya phalgu ham.sair yatha_ks.i_ram iva_mbumadhya_t : boundless indeed is the science of language, but life is short and obstacles arenumerous; hence take what is good and leave what is worthless, as geese take ilk from the midst of water (From Pancatantra cf. Otto Boehtling's IndischeSpruche, St. Petersburg, 1870-73 (reprint Osnabruck, 1966), Vol. I, p.45, No.243).

10 The symbol is used in etymological dictionaries as a prefix to reconstructions of ancient morphemes; these reconstructions are generally hypothetical, sometimes based on argued laws of 'phonetic change.' 11Each semantic cluster includes a number of words. Vowel sequencing is not rigidly followed for a string of semantic clusters with an initial consonant. Broadly, the sequences (of semantic clusters) are, generally, linked to the initial consonants in the following order: k, c, t, n, p/m/v. Thus, for example, kXc may include kac, ka~c, ka_ c, ka~_c, kic, ki_c, kuc etc.vowel/nasal sequences. Choice of Sanskrit or Tamil, for example, for purposes of syllabic sequencing of the semantic clusters may be considered to be arbitrary. This is premised on the belief that it is incorrect to assume that anyone of the present-day languages of India preserves the proto-Indian phonemic structures. In many instances, this order is also ignored to place concordant 'image' clusters close to other semantic clusters or to place, for example c- or t- clusters with concordant meanings. Similarly, since there has been an extraordinary divergence of phonetics among v-, m-, b-, p- words, in many instances, such words are sequenced in close proximity. If an 'image' word (in particular, a word evoking a pictograph from the Indus script) was found only in one of the Indian languages, such a word is treated as a unique semantic cluster and included in the lexicon, even though this author has not been able to locate concordant words in other languages of the family.

For 'alphabetical` indexing or 'areal` (i.e. by geographical regions) sequencing, Turner's A Comparative Dictionary of Indo-Aryan Languages (CDIAL), Burrow and

xi
Emeneau's A Dravidian Etymological Lexicon (DEDR), Pali, Sanskrit, Kannada, Tamil, Munda, Santali and other lexicons of Indian languages are unsurpassed sources. DEDR solves the problem of sequencing by using Tamil morphemes as the reference base for the entire group in Tamil syllabic order. In effect, the vocabulary of this lexicon, include many CDIAL and DEDR entries as sub-sets12 and constitute a semantic index to both CDIAL and DEDR which will continue to provide the basic references to areal etyma. The primary justification for choosing a simple sequencing based on a limited number of initial vowels/consonants and consonantal combinations (with intervening vowels or nasals)13 is that each semantic cluster can be treated as a distinct monograph which may provide material for further study of the Indian language family in which there has apparently been an extraordinary semantic affinity between and among related languages. 12This work is dedicated to Pa_n.ini and Tolka_ ppiyan-. Pa_n.ini is perhaps the earliest grammarian who created a super-set of morphemes based on phonologicaland morphological rules perceived by him for Sanskrit. The guidelines provided by him for analyzing the structure of a language are of unsurpassed excellence. So are the guidelines contained in the grammatical work of Tolka_ppiyan-, Tolka_ppiyam (of a later era) of great value in any attempt at semanticclustering of areal vocabulary.13The pratya_ha_ra su_tra of Pa_n.ini deals with grammatical symbols orabbreviations; a pratya_ha_ra is formed by taking any efficient letter andjoining it with a non-efficient letter. Such letters are listed in fourteenaphorisms: a i un.; r.lr.k; e on.g; ai auc; ha ya va rat.; lan.;n ma n.a n.a nam; jhabhan; gha d.ha dhas.; ja ba ga d.a das'; kha pha cha t.a tha ca t.a tav; ka pay; s'a s.a sar; hal : these fourteen groups of letters are called s'ivasu_tra_n.i or mahe_s'vara_n.i su_tra_n.i. In the s'ivasu_tras, the long vowels and the anusvara and visarga are omitted. The consonants are arranged in the following order: the aspirate,the semivowels, the nasals, the aspirated soft consonants, the unaspiratedsoft consonants, the aspirated hard consonants, the unaspirated hardconsonants, the sibilants, and the aspirate inserted a second time... The object of the scheme is to devise a plan by which several letters may be designated by a single syllable called a pratya_ha_ra, so that the necessity for naming them severally in a su_tra may be dispensed with. In this list of letters contained in the 14 aphorisms, the non-efficient letters may be identified as: n., k, n. etc. Some interpretations state that ac means all the vowels; hal means all the consonants; jas' means all soft unaspirated consonants; car means all hard unaspirated consonants. The pratya_ha_ras areelaborated into 42 starting rom _n. and ending with s'al.

One substantive problem in organizing the semantic clusters was the problem of 'alphabetical' or 'syllabic' sequencing. It has been difficult to follow a strict alphabetical ordering in this work. This is due to the author's inability to pin down the ancient 'phonetics' of a sememe or to construct a proto-Indian form. This limitation has resulted in some duplication of terms in more than one semantic cluster. The idiosyncratic sequencing14 is due to the limits of knowledge of the author; the result has been a number of semantic clusters included in the lexicon containing phonetic forms which may not always 14The clusters are in the following groups of initial word sounds: a-i-ue- o; k-kh-g-gh; c-ch-j-jh/s-s'-s.;n -n; t-th-d-dh/t.-t.h-d.-d.h; r-l; v-p-ph-b-bh-m.

correspond with the etymological grouping.S amuel Johnson refers to a lexicographer as an harmless drudge15. What a pleasant and glorious drudge! An etymologist is also a drudge but may provoke, hopefully lively, linguistic disputes among the proponents of dialects of a language family, on issues such as 'true inheritance' or 'great antiquity'16! he disputes (or positive creative tensions), may also draw inspiration and guidance from the past linguistic studies of great scholars who have provided valuable insights into the phonological, grammatical and lexical aspects of a proto-Indian language family.

An English semantic index has been included. The index is composed of (i) English meanings, and (ii) flora (names of botanical species in Latin terms), plants and products of plants (in English and vernacular terms which have entered the English lexicon). As in DEDR, no attempt has been made to state the equivalence of Latin flora terms; DEDR entries in a group of etyma record the equivalence found in Hooker at the end of the numbered etymological group. The index is primarily based on the elegantly designed index of A Dravidian Etymological Lexicon (DEDR). To quote from DEDR: (p.773) "This is an index of the more important meanings recorded for words in the Dravidian languages. No attempt has been made to list all the English meanings given in the entries, since such a procedure would have swollen this index beyond all reason. In fact, in any attempt to keep it within bounds, usually only one of a group of synonyms or near-synonyms has been listed: e.g. resemble is listed, but not similar and like... The derivational system of English words, since it does not coincide with that of Dravidian, has in general been ignored..."

Organization of the work

The dominance of economic activities in the lives of ancient Indians will 15Given the limitations of linguistic competence of the author, this lexicon has taken over five years of the author's life, working on a powerful personal computer system, averaging about 4 hours daily -- a challenging drudgery. This work might, perhaps, have taken more than one lifetime, without the use of computer technology. The technology proved to be an efficient tool to sort and re-sort the text entries and to perform thousands of iterations in creating the semantic clusters.

16 To assist the students and scholars, this lexicon is available on diskettes. The diskettes (using over 25 megabytes of space) have been created using a software called WordPerfect 5.2 under IBM Windows. The software has been suitably modified with macros, to create the appropriate phonetic symbols. The font used is a downloadable, proportionally-spaced, soft-font typeface called Postscript Courier 10 point (an equivalent bit-map font called Prestige Elite 12 cpi (characters per inch) can be substituted, if necessary) as a reference base for positioning the diacritical marks. The diskettes may be used with an HP Laserjet 4 printer to create a 600 dpi (dots per inch) hard-copy of the text of the lexicon. The author will be happy to make available the diskettes, through the publishers.

Xiv be apparent from the semantic clusters compiled in this lexicon. Semantic clusters include words expressing cognate 'thoughts'17. The ancient economic court was dominated by plant products such as fragrances, incenses and exudations which were highly valued and in great demand. For example, the ancient Egyptian civilization records trans-continental expeditions18 to pw'nt (or punt) in search of such plant products which may be designated as Kube_ra's nava-nidhi or nine treasures of Kube_ra, in the yaks.atradition of great antiquity.

The inclusion of names of many plants and plant products in the lexicon, has a strong justification in terms of ancient life-styles. The etyma related to plants have been elaborated with cross-references on therapeutic effects described in works dealing with the subject of pharmacognosy and, in some instances, the references in pharmacopoeia of various countries have also been provided.

Plants and plant products (gums, gum-resins, fragrances, incenses, plant exudations, bark, in particular) had an extraordinary place in the cultural processes of ancient civilizations (particularly in the Indian linguistic area, in the ancient Egyptian civilization and in the Biblical areas), including for example, the depiction of the so-called nine treasures of Kube_ra, all of which may relate to plant products. (i) The existence of many nighan.t.us principally devoted to materia medica of the ancient medical systems and (ii) the archaeological finds of viha_ras such as the Ajanta and Ellora caves which might have been used by medicine-men and to stock plant products justify further studies on the economic importance of plant products in cultural history.

Vedic soma was comparable in economic importance to the plants and plant products. In an extraordinary process described eloquently in Vedic chants, 17"... language in the concrete sense... is... the sum of words and phrases by which any man expresses his thought." (Whitney, William D., Oriental and Linguistic Studies, New York, 1874, p. 372 cited in: Chomsky Current Issues in Linguistic Theory, The Hague, 1964, p. 22). 18"In year 8 of Sankhkare Mentuhotpe (2009-1998 B.C.) ... an expedition of 3,000 men, recruited from Upper Egypt and led by the Chief Steward Henenu, left the Nile valley near Kopptos and headed east across the desert towards the Red Sea, 90 miles away. Their orders were to re-establish commerce by sea with the fabulously rich land of Punt... unvisited by Egyptians since the days of the Sixth Dynasty... voyages to Byblos and Punt seem to be regular in the Sixth Dynasty (2345-2181 B.C.)... with references to building ships for an expedition to Punt... in the Twelfth Dynasty (1991-1786 B.C.), ships sailed southward from Red Sea ports to the incense-land of Punt... soma was purchased, and went through a process kept secret from the seller. Soma was washed in water (yad-adbhih paris.ichyase mr.jyama_no gabhastyoh- : RV.ix.65.6), then pounded either with stone or in a mortar (RV. 1.83.6; RV.1.28.4); it had am.s'u (RV. ix.67.28); it yielded andhas, rasa, pitu, pi_yu_s.a oramr.ta; it was xvi purifed through a strainer (antah- pavitra a_ hitah- : RV. ix.12.5). It was not 'drunk' by mortals. Soma was the product of an activity using intense fire, and involving the participation of the entire household for days and nights. Soma was wealth. The dawn of urbanization and transition from agrarian economy to an economy dominated by artisans, are vividly reconstructed from the archaeological finds of the Indus Valley civilization which may also be called the Sarasvati_civilization. A pen picture with exquisite photographs is provided in the Age of God-Kings:"About 2500 BC, a people of unknown origin started constructing a series of cities as remarkable as any the world had yet seen. Artisans set to work, trade flourished and a system of writing evolved. At its apogee, the Indus civilization encompassed nearly 1.3 million square kilometers; its boundaries stretched from the foothills of the Himalayas to the Arabian Sea and from the Ganges watershed to the Gulf of Bombay, just to the north of what is now Bombay. It was the largest cultural domain of its era... This people also perfected the art of casting objects in bronze, a breakthrough in technology that ranks among humankind's greatest early achievements... The pictographic script of the Indus people has not yet been successfully deciphered. The Southeast Asian rice farmers seem not to have developed a system of writing... the Indus people... built grand cities, centers of production and trade... One of these cities... Harappa... around 2300 BC, Harappa was home to 35,000 people... Another great city took shape 550 kilometers to the south, on the lower Indus... Mohenjo-Daro -- 'Hill of the Dead' in Sindhi... Two gateways provided access through the wall. Within the citadel were assembly halls, administrative offices and a number of residences for various officials and functionaries. Only an enormous collective effort could have created these two great urban centers of the Indus culture... The huge complexes at Mohenjo-Daro and Harappa that are believed to be municipal granaries covered thousand upon thousand of square meters. They had raised brick floors... and strong, timbered roofs to protect against the weather. The apparent threshing areas nearby were paved in brick and included circular pits where workers pounded the kernels with wooden staves to remove the husks from the grain... The harvest was probably a state monopoly, and the granaries served, in effect, as state treasuries... They were the world's first people to grow cotton and to weave its fibre into textiles... Trading posts were established far beyond the valley's fringes. The Indus people founded a settlement at Sutkagen Dor, west of Baluchistan and within reach of the Persian Gulf. To the south of the valley, a large seaport took shape at Lothal on the Gulf of Cambay... From Lothal, high-prowed, double-ended sailing vessels carried the gold, gems and timber products of southern India along the coast to the Indus Valley and beyond. The richest trade route from the valley lay to the west, through the Persian Gulf to Mesopotamia. Starting about 2350 BC, traffic with the urban centers of Sumer and Akkad expanded to become a prime source of revenue... Merchants used sets of cubical stone weights that never varied in value

throughout the Indus region. The basic unit was 16, equal to 14 grams. The larger weights were multiples of 16 -- 32,64,128, and so on up to 12,800 (11 kilograms); the smaller ones were all fractions of 16... The Indus merchants, like their Sumerian counterparts, developed a method of record keeping and used carved stone seals to stamp their property. Every mercantile family had its own device, and probably every important citizen did also. More than 2,000 examples have been found in the Indus cities, and others have turned up in Mesopotamia, left there by overseas traders... One popular motif appears to have been a unicorn sniffing at an incense burner. The unicorn is probably a bull in profile, so that one horn hides the other. But why the creature has been offered incense is a puzzlement. In a seal from Mohenjo-Daro, both the unicorn and the incense brazier are being carried aloft in some kind of procession... the Indus tongue is lost in antiquity and none of the signs (on seals) corresponds to any used by the Egyptians or Sumerians. The seal inscriptions are brief -- one or two lines... The Indus people left no surviving histories, no religious texts, no literary epics...

(Harappan merchants used the seals as a kind of trademark impressing them on clay tags to label their goods)... after each catastrophe (earthquake or flood), the citizens picked up their lives again. Some sections of Mohenjo-Daro were rebuilt as many as eight times. In each reconstruction, the architects re-created the previous construction virtually brick for brick... Sometime during the nineteenth century BC, however, the Indus cities began to slip into permanent decline... Scribes in Mesopotamia recorded rich shipments from the Indus Valley until around 1800 BC, when they suddenly ceased... The urban heritage was passed on to the east... somber notes of Harappan ideology would continue to reverberate through the coming centuries." (The Age of God-kings, 3000-1500 B.C., Amsterdam, Time-Life Books, 1991, pp.129-141).

Archaeology and Language

One approach suggested by Colin Renfrew is a correlation, however hypothetically, of language changes with demographic and social changes recorded by archaeology. Decipherment of the script is important to bring the civilization within the bounds of history, and to establish that the civilization should not remain categorized as 'prehistoric'. For, 'prehistoric' would mean 'prior to the use of writing.' (cf. Colin Renfrew, Archaeology and Language: the Puzzle of Indo-European Origins, Penguin Books, 1987, p.2). If this lexicon has established that the Indian language family had closely related members, it should be reasonable to hypothesize that the Indus Script was related to one or more dialects of this language, though there is no direct evidence to prove precisely which language was spoken between 2500 to 1700 B.C. in the region traversed by this civilization. "... (Archaeology) is beginning to interest itself in the ideology of early communities: their religions, the way they expressed rank, status and group identity. The question of language is important here... modern linguistics and current processual archaeology offer the opportunity for a new synthesis... (Indus Valley Civilization) was a literate civilization... some four hundred signs were found, fifty-three of them used commonly... this suggests that it must be a mixed hieroglyphic and syllabic script rather than a pure syllabic script like Minoan Linear B... not enough (signs) for a true pictographic script like that of the Egyptian hieroglyphs or the Chinese script... are the Indus Valley sealstone inscriptions in an early form of Indo-European?... xix there is no inherent reason why the people of the Indus Valley Civilization should not already have been speaking an Indo-European language, the ancestor of the Rigveda...

Hypothesis A, then, would carry the history of the Indo-European languages in north India and Iran back to the early neolithic period in those areas... (Hypothesis B) outlines an alternative... which accepts the likelihood of local farming origins... (and) a process ofe' lite dominance... by wellorganized and mobile tribal groups, with a chiefdom organization... while we cannot expect to find direct evidence in the archaeological record for a specific prehistoric language or language group, we can indeed study processes or demographic and social change. It is these processes of change which we may seek, however hypothetically, to correlate with language change in those areas... it is perfectly possible that the languages used in the Indus Valley civilization as early as 3000 BC were already Indo-European... We are talking here of simple peasant farmers, with a restricted range of domestic plants and animals and a limited range of crafts. These may generally have included weaving and pottery-making and other farming skills, but theirs were egalitarian societies... 'segmentary societies,' laying stress on the almost autonomous nature of individual village or neighborhood communities. Naturally there were links and marriage exchanges between these... three issues now remain that we should look at: language origins, language dispersals, and the relationship between archaeology and linguistic studies... " (Colin Renfrew, op cit., pp. 5,7, 183-185, 190-191, 197, 205, 264. 271, 73). One approach to study changes in languages is to cluster the dialects of a language together. Such a clustering is attempted in this lexicon. These clusters provide the basis for further studies to correlate the changes in languages with the socio-economic changes established through archaeology.

Language and Script

An attempt to link the Indus Script to the Indian etyma, is a search for Indian linguistic roots. It is, in effect, a search for words which are 'as old as time`. Many scripts of the current Indian languages are syllabic in structure. It is notable that Tamil, in particular, utilizes a remarkably compact alphabet (syllabary derived via grantha forms from the Bra_hmi_script); for example, the script symbol for the syllable, ka connotes a phonetic spectrum of ka, kha,ga and gha. The use of a limited number of script symbols for syllables is perhaps an indication that, even if the phoneme (for a given morpheme) had a ka, kha, ga or gha, the semantic content remained unaltered. This extraordinary economy (yet, diversity) in script form is, therefore, an indication that for effective linguistic communication of a message, phonetic formants19 are subordinate to 19In phonetics, formants refer to banks of energy generated by an acoustic pattern and measured in cycles per second (cps);... formants are specified by their frequency and relative intensity... vowel formants, for example bend upwards, that is, they increase in frequency, before they reach their steady positions after a specific duration (of about a tenth of a second when the sound retains its plosive character)... changes of this kind in vowel

the semantic structure of morphemes.20

Many ancient scripts were evolved on the principle of 'ideographs', i.e. depicting a word as an image (logo, on a seal, for example) using a homophone (i.e. a similar sounding word). The importance of 'images' in formulating 'meaning' (in neuronal structures) or for designing 'scripts', is paralleled formants are known as 'transitions'... for example, the explosion of (p) does not sound like that of (t)... its energy is distributed fairly evenly over all frequencies, whereas (t) has most energy between 2,000 and 4,000 cps if the following vowel is rounded, or between 3,500 and 6,000 cps if it is not rounded... for (d), for instance, this transition will always be related to a frequency of about 1,800 cps... (J. D. O'Connor, Phonetics, Pelican Books, 1973, pp. 87-90).

Some notes on phonetics and semantics

An ancient consonant: -mb- may explain the transition from -mb- to -m- or -b-/-bh- or -v-/-p- in many etyma.Possibly, the ancient consonant in many etyma was a compound consonant: tc- or ts-. In two linguistic streams, the accent oscillates between s-/c- and t-;cf. tagori, cakra potter's wheel. t- is preferred when the -c- intervenes in the following syllable as in tai-, teccu- (sewing) (Ta.) To smoothen the phonetic structure, -c- is either replaced by -d- or omitted, in semantic extensions, as in (cu_ci = u_ci =) su_di needle (Nk.); su_i_tailor (WPah.). Many etyma are notable with perhaps another compound consonant: ss'-, which, in two linguistic streams, evidences two phonetic transforms: > h-, > k-. ku sign of the dative case; connective particle as in ar.ikuve _ n; suffix added to verbs, nouns, etc., to form (a) abstract nouns, as in nanku; (b) verbal nouns, as po _ kku; finite verbs in 1st pers. sing. fut., as un.ku; prefix added to words in Sanskrit, as in kutar-k-kam, signifying badness, evil, unfairness; earth (Ta.lex.) gan.d.e, gen.d.iya, ken.t.ai carp (DEDR 1947) > kayal carp (DEDR 1252) This concordance (and possible phonetic change) finds a remarkable parallel in the homonymous etyma: 'ladle, spoon'. gen.t.e spoon, ladle (Te.)(DEDR 1267) > kailuladle, spoon (Tu.); kayyil id.(Ma.); ki_li ladle (Kurub.)(DEDR 1257).

A transposition of initial syllables ne_-/ve_-, ne-/ve- occurs in many etyma;for example, in one linguistic stream, for semant. 'weaving' syllable ve_-occurs; and in another, semant. 'weaving' syllable ne_- occurs: the actionsrelate to twisting and plaiting of cane (net.ru S.) or bamboo (ve_l.a Pali);[cf.ve_y (-v-, -nt-) to thatch (Ta.)(DEDR 5532)]; negad.u is a polypus thatentangles swimmers (Te.), vehar. is an octopus of the Ganges (P.)}.

by a distinct semantic structural feature of Santali language in which words are not uniquely marked for specific functions such as noun or verb but most stems of words are multifunctional. There is no grammatical gender for nouns which may be lexically marked (using for example, herel for male; maejiu for female). There are no formal marks for grammatical class, a word can perform various functions: as noun, as adjective or as verb. In Santali, every stem or root (sememe) is potentially a verb. Qualifiers can be constructed by simply adding -n for e.g. kad.awa.n hor. a man who has buffaloes. (George L. Campbell, Compendium of the

World's Languages, Routledge, London, 1991, p. 1199)21. "In Santali, any word may (in theory at least) be used as a verb simply by adding a, which is the verbal sign, and other signs to signify tense, mood etc. The a alone signifies the general or future tense in the active voice -- used to make general statements, or statements referring to the future... The verb generally comes at the end of a sentence or phrase... (Santali language) consists of rootwords and various infixes, suffixes and particles, joined together or agglutinated in such a way as to form phrases and sentences... dalgot'kedeae... dal the root word, meaning to strike or striking; got' an adverbial particle giving the sense of quickly or suddenly; ked the sign ket', denoting the past tense of the active voice, modified to ked... e ... signifying an animate object -- him, or her... a the verbal sign, showing that the idea of striking is used verbally; e the short form of the 3rd personal pronoun, singular... denoting the subject -- he, or she." (R.M. Macphail, An Introduction to Santali, 1953, p.2). Taking into account, this historical factor which governed the evolution of alphabets and the important part played by 'root word'22 in Santali (a member of the ancient Indian family of languages) this lexicon attempts to identify 'sememes' and also provide an aid to epigraphists or scholars interested in deciphering the Indus script. For this purpose (and based on the assumption that the Indus script may be related 21There is a concordant rule in Pa _n.ini: s'iva_dis'yo_n. (s'iva-a_dis'yah-, an.); avr.ddhas'yo_nadi_ma_nus.ibhyastanna_mika_jyah- (Bk. IV. Ch. I.112, 113), i.e. the affix or patronymic an. comes in the sense of a descendant, after the words s'iva etc.; the affix an. comes in the sense of a descent, after words which are the names of rivers, or women, when such words are not vriddham words; and when they are used as names and not as adjectives. Another set of aphorisms deals with 'collection': tasya samu _ hah-; bhiks.a_dis'yo_n. (Bk. IV. Ch. I.37, 38): an ffix is added to a word, when the sense is 'a collection thereof'; the affix an. comes, in the sense of 'collection thereof', after the words bhiks.a_(alms)etc. The affixes an. and an come after the words sindhu and apakara in the sense of 'produced therein' ajanau ca (Bk. IV. Ch. III.33).

22 For Sanskrit, the definition given by Pa_n.ini is : bhu_va_dayo_dha_tavah(Bk. I, Ch. III.1) i.e. the words beginning with bhu_'to become' and denoting action, are called dha_tu or verbal roots; ten classes identified by Sanskrit grammarians of such action verbs (about 2,000) are: bhu_, ad, hu, div, su, tud,rudh, tan, kri_, chur; this classification is based on modifications seen in these roots before specific terminations (parasmaipada or a_tmane_pada or both). Dha_tu is a morpheme which may antedate Pa_n.ini and connotes a morphemeexpressing action, analogous to the Santali language tradition.

to the Indian language family), many semantic clusters in this lexiconinclude, what are titled as, 'image' words, i.e. word forms which could havebeen represented graphically, as in the symbols and signs used in the as-yetundeciphered Indus script23. Such 'image' clusters are sequenced close23Of an unknown language! In dealing with an unknown language, twoinventories have to be made: a phonemic inventory and a semantic inventory andboth these inventories have to be presented in semantic clusters... In thislexicon, considering the distribution of sounds in words within a clustercontaining the same meaning, it may be noted that though different phoneticpreferences (for example: l or n; m or v; sa or ka; t.a or ta) occur indifferent members of the language family, they represent the same phoneme.Similarly, speakers of a given language of the Indian family have their own ideas on what constitutes a syllable (phoneme sequence). These ideas may differ from the ideas of speakers of other languages who may break the same sequence into two or three syllables. After all, society shapes language; and, language is a reflection of the society that shapes it. Semantic clustering may, therefore, be considered a linguistic technique which attempts to reconstruct the images of life-activities of a society.

to the other substantive clusters which are related to life-activities of ancient civilizations as evidenced by archaeological finds and artifacts. The titles provided to many semantic clusters with the prefix 'image' refer to a number of images provided by the pictographs and signs of the seals and tablets containing Indus script. Such pictographs and signs will be clustered to aid those interested in deciphering the script. At this stage of the author's knowledge, it has not been possible to include some thoughts on 'alternative interpretations' of these 'ideographs' of the Indus script. A separate monograph will be presented providing an approach to breaking the deadlock of the decipherment problem. A start can be made assuming that each pictograph is a homonym (i.e. an image of a similar sounding 'substantive' word). Many 'substantives' are indeed based on the economic activities of an evolving civilization.

On the problem of the Indus Script, it is important to refer to one message on a sealing from Umma, since no bilingual script messages have so far been found: "...an imprint of (indus) seal upon the fragment of a clay label from a bale of cloth had also been published by Father Scheil (Revue d'Assyriologie, Vol. 22: 56), and this was said to come from the site of Umma, the neighbor city of Lagash...No.1. First among the seals discovered at Ur (in 1923) is the unique object ...in the British Museum...On the face stands, below, the figure of a bull with head bent down...the inscription...is in archaic cuneiform writing...of a period before 2500 B.C. There are three signs and very probably traces of a fourth, almost obliterated; the three preserved are themselves scratchy and rather worn, though not ill-formed. Hence their reading is doubtful--the choices are, for the first SAG(K) or KA, for the second KU or possibly LU, while the third is almost certainly S' I, and the fourth, it existed at all, is quite uncertain...using the commonest values of the signs, sak-ku-s'i--(with possible loss of something at the end) may be pronounced the best provisional reading...It does not, at least, seem to be any Sumerian or Akkadian name...(the seal is) probably, a product of some place under the influence both of Indus and of the Sumerian civilizations." (Gadd, 1932, pp.3-32.)

Adding an assumed syllable TU at the end, the value of the message reads: sakku-s'i-tu. Hunter noted that three round seals with Harappan characters found in Mesopotamia may not be in Harappan language since there were marked differences in the sequence of letters. (Hunter, 1932, p.469.) Analogously, an Indus-type seal (squarish with a perforated button on the ridged back) with cuneiform characters may be surmised to relate to a non-Harappan language. The non-Harappan origin is surmised for a glazed steatite cylinder seal found at Tell Asmar, which shows an Indus motif: procession of an elephant, a rhinoceros and a crocodile. Xxvi (Frankfort, 1933, pp.50-53; Asthana, 1979, p.40.) Ur III texts indicate the need for interpreters to translate the Meluhhan language. sak means 'head'. kusi_ tu is a 'king's garment' of the "Neo-Assyrian kings similar to those worn by images of the gods." (Oppenheim, 1964, p.98.) It is unclear if the s in the word should be pronounced s'. The semantic content of the entire message in archaic cuneiform script may be given the value: king's [head] garment. An alternative interpretation may be that, the kus'itu was a money-lender (cf. Vedic.lex.) ?sak = ?saha partner?24 sak meant probably, a principal (trading partner) in relation to an agent. Or, it could be sag, an archaic form of san.gha or society. Could the inscription mean : sag kos'a or the treasury of the society? These are tentative interpretations which will have to be further validated by an evaluation of the entire (though, very limited -- only a few thousands) sample of messages without committing what Gilbert Ryle calls a 'category mistake25.' An approach to a resolution of the decipherment problem will be

24 sha_h a rich merchant, one who lends money on interest; a banker, a shopkeepeer, a trader; a king; a title assumed by faqirs; the principal in relation with an agent; sha_h, guma_shta_an affix to the names of Sayyads; sha_hdara_ the name of a village on the bank of the Ravi near Lahore containing the magnificent mausoleum of the Emperor Jahangir; sha_ hra_h a principal street, a public road; sha_h maksadi_a kind of marble from Yusufzai; sha_ h nashin. A projecting platform erected on the roof of a house to sit on; sha _h bin. patnahin., guru_bin. gat nahin. no honour (credit) without banker, no salvation without a Guru; shahir a city; shahir pana_h the city walls; sa_hu_ka_r a great merchant, a rich person, a banker, a money-lender; honest, respectable; sa_huka_ra_the business of a sa_hu_ka_r, a banking and money business (P.lex.)

25 Ryle, the Oxford philosopher, expounds on the category mistake in contrasting the concepts of 'brain' and 'mind'. What socio-economic category do the Indus Script messages indicate? Are they names? Are they professional titles? Are they marriage badges with inscribed lists of presents? Are they deeds for transfer of landed property? Are they receipts for property stored in granaries? Are they commodities and their measures? Are they gum-resins? Are they grains, other plant products and their measures? Are they toll-stamps used by toll-collectors at ferries? Are they announcing ownership of property ancient speech26 are listed in separate annexes of this lexicon. This is consistent with the principal focus of this lexicon which is to: cluster together word forms with comparable semantic content and establish the essential semantic unity among the Indian languages. In this process of semantic clustering, attention is paid to concordant phonetic forms. In evaluating the development of pronunciation and sense of words of the languages of the Indian linguistic area, an effort has been made to avoid duplicating the functions of lexicography. The focus is on 'meaning' of words,27 extensions of meaning and on phonetic transforms cognate with the basic words. Lexicographers have attempted to define the phonetic structure of a morpheme in a language, with care and integrity, given the constraints of the phonetic symbols used for the script of the chosen language. This lexicon proceeds on the assumption that the language lexicons which are its source books, are based on painstaking social surveys and provide a commonly accepted form (i.e. through social contract) of the phonetic variants of various dialects of any Such 'free morphemes' include: mannostalgia, wonder and irony; til great desire, time and implied meaning; konfear, uselessness, time and greatness; tancam easiness; el luminosity; empty morphs such as ya _, ka_, pir-a, pir-akku, aro_. cf. one language. Since the focus is on semantics, the author has exercised a degree of freedom to coalesce the phonetic variations and as necessary, repeated some etyma in more than one semantic cluster. Speakers of every language and poets, in particular, of every language do possess enormous degrees of freedom for verbal creativity to anchor life experiences, but subject to the social contract on sememes or the 'meaning' of morphemes used in inter-personal verbal or written communication. Take for instance, the rules of Sanskrit language, codified by the linguistic genius, Pa_n.ini and obeyed through literary media for over a millennium. Pa_n.ini's phonological and morphological canons are hypostatized (attributed real identities to a concept) aphorisms. Pa_n.ini was held in such awe that later linguists would not refer to what Pa_n.ini 'says' but use the verb 'pas'yati'referring to his aphorisms [i.e. referring to what Pa_n.ini 'sees', as a r.s.i orseer]. Pa_n.ini opposes the bha_s.a_, defined by him in an archaic chandah-(cf. S.Le'vi, J.A., 1891, II, p. 549; Me`moires de la Socie'te de Linguistic de Paris,XVI, p.278-279; loc. cit. Bloch, The Formation of the Mara_t.hi_Language, 1914,p.3). "... in the enumeration of Bharata (XVII, 48): ma_gadhyavantija_pra_cya_su_ryasenyardhama_gadhi_ba_hli_ka_da_ks.in.a_tya_ca sapta ha_s.a_h- praki_rtita_h-" six out ofseven are geographically determinable and three out of these four (ma_gadhi, s'auraseni_, maha_ra_s.t.ri) are mentioned by Vararuci. Later on Dan.d.in adds to these three La_t.i_'and similar other ones' (Ka_vya_dars'a, I,35)... Later on Vararuci situates the Pais'a_ci_on the same level as the three great Pra_krts with ageographical name... the language of braj is used for the cycle of Kr.s.n.a, thatof Bundelkhand for that of A_lha_-u_dal, that of Avadha for that of Ra_ma and generally speaking for the Epic... No region of India has imposed its language on the entire country... within each dialect there is a large quantity ofwords or series of words which have had a history independent of the dialects where they have been found in use. This history, which can be established with some difficulty even in the case of well-known languages as those of Europe,is altogether impossible, at least provisionally, in India... " (Bloch, op cit., pp. 11-12; p.45). In making bold to attempt this 'impossible' task through semantics, one dominant structural characteristic of the Indian language family can be noted with confidence: the use of 'echo words' identified as such in this lexicon. (Pa _ n.ini calls such words a _mred.ita orrepeated : Bk. VIII. Ch. 1.2). The endency to repeat words or with fine initial consonantal variations is a characteristic that runs across the entire family of languages, a characteristic that was also noted by Vararuci. The ancient linguists tried to delineate this 'refined' language as the 'perfect' language (whether divinely inspired smr.ti remembered or s'ruti heard); yet, the spoken word was governed by the inexorable laws of neurosciences and social contract -- as evidenced by the Pra _kr.ts (original or natural forms) which did ot obey these 'rules' of the grammarian though adored by the linguists. The ra_kr.ts (including Pali) continued to diverge from the 'perfection' of Sanskrit and were socio-linguistically accepted in Sanskrit drama in the early centuries of the Christian era, though not spoken by gods or heroes in the dramas, but only by the proletariat! Women sang in Maha _ra_s.t.ri_pra_kr.t, spoke inxxxiS'auraseni pra_kr.t and people in the lower rungs of the social ladder spoke ma_gadhi_pra_kr.t. Many pra_kr.ts were written in Kharo_s.t.hi script. Buddha (c. sixthcentury B.C.) perhaps preached in ardhama_gadhi_pra_kr.t (Pali), written in Bra_hmi_script. Mun.d.a_ri_and Santali (grouped as Kherwari or Austro-Asiatic)perhaps ante-date the Indo-European or the so-called Dravidian linguistic presence in India. The Indian language family also includes Gypsy (Romany; gypsy ~~ Egyptian; ethonym: roma). Gypsies popularly believed to have come from Egypt, emigrated from India towards the end of the first millennium A.D. via Iran into Anatolia, South Russia, and the Balkans, to reach western Europeby the fifteenth century, Britain by the sixteenth; via Iran, Syria and the Mediterranean into north Africa and the Iberian peninsula. (George L. Campbell, Compendium of the World's Languages, Routledge, London, 1991, p.1164).Ya_ska (6th-4th c. B.C.), Pa_n.ini 5th c. B.C.), Ka_tya_yana (3rd c. B.C.), Patanjali (c. 150 B.C.) have laid the foundations of anskrit etymology andgrammar. The su_tras of Pa_n.ini analyze Sanskrit into a system of roots, stems and suffixes.Ka_tya_yana's va _rttikas explain, criticize and supplement these rules. Patanjali's bha_s.ya explains the rules of Pa_n.ini and Ka_tya_yana and is often severelycritical of the latter. Kaiyat.a commends Patanjali of the three since he has observed more numbers of actual forms : (II.4.26) munidvaya_c ca bha_s.ayaka_rahprama_n.ataram adhikalaks.yadars'itva_t : the author of the commentary (i.e. Patanjali) has greater authority than the other two sages because he has observedmore linguistic usage. Grammatical rules were formulated, perhaps, for thebenefit of 'immigrants' or as teaching aids to students of a language. In this process of delineating grammatical rules, the phonetic and morphological structures of each of the Indian languages were codified and frozen as 'rules' of the language. (cf. the example of Tolka _ ppiyam for Tamil or As.t.a_dhya_yi forSanskrit). Pa_n.ini also called Gonadri_ya/ Gonika_putra) is perhaps the oldest grammarian of the world28. His As.t.a_dhya_yi (lit. 8 chapters with 3,996 mnemonic su_tras)29 and later critical evaluation/defence by Patanjali (also called, Da_ks.i_putra in his Maha_bha_s.ya or Great Prose Work) countering Ka_tya_yana's criticism in the Va_rttika_s (explanatory tracts of words) are unsurpassed ancient linguistic explorations into the etyma of and rules governing the Sanskrit language. Pa_n.ini traces with stunning precision and scholarly excellence, the 28 Was there an ancient Aindra school of grammar? Taittiri_ya-sam.hita_6.4.7 connects Indra to the origin of grammar: "Speech indeed spoke formerly without manifestation (avya_kr.ta). The gods said to Indra: 'do manifest this speech for us'... Indra approaching it from the middle made it manifest (avya _kr.t).Therefore speech is manifest (vya_kr.ta)" : [From Patanjali's introduction to the Maha_bha_s.ya, quoted in Staal, J.F., "Sanskrit Philosophy of Language", Current Trends in Linguistics, 5, pp. 499-531, 1969].

29 After salutation to the supreme spirit, o _m parama_tmane namah-, the great work is invoked by Pa_n.ini as: atha s'abda_nus'a_sanam, i.e. now an explanatorysystem for words or a dissertation on the science (grammar and philology) of words.

individual phonetic and morphological changes throughout the language which may be called a language that spanned both Vedic and Classical Sanskrit30. (For a good survey of works on Pa_n.ini cf. George

30 "The Sanskrit is above all things an analyzable language, one admitting of the easy and distinct separation of ending from stem, and of derivative suffix from primitive word, back to the ultimate attainable elements, the socalled roots. Accordingly, in its perfected form (for all the preparatory stages are unknown to us), the Hindu grammar offers us an established body of roots, with rules for their conversion into stems and for the inflection of the latter, and also for the accompanying phonetic changes--this last involving and resting upon a phonetic science of extraordinary merit, which has called forth the highest admiration of modern scholars; nothing at all approaching it has been produced by any ancient people; it has served as the foundation in no small degree of our own phonetics; even as our science of grammar and of language has borrowed much from India... actually more than half (of the roots listed in Pa _n.ini)-- never have been met with, and never will be met with, in the Sanskrit literature of any age... Beyond allquestion, a certain number of cases are to be allowed for, of real roots, proved such by the occurrence of their evident cognates in other related languages, and chancing not to appear in the known literature; but they can go only a very small way indeed toward accounting for the eleven hundred unauthenticated roots... The skilled students of the native grammar, as it seems to me, have been looking at their task from the wrong point of view, and laboring in the wrong direction. They have been trying to put the non-existent grammarians' dialect in the place of the genuine Sanskrit..." Cardona, Pa_n.ini : A Survey of Research, 1976; for an excellent reader on the Sanskrit grammarians, cf. Stall, J.F. (ed.), A Reader on the SanskritGrammarians, Cambridge, M.I.T. Press, 1972). It would be inappropriate to call Pa_n.ini's Sanskrit brahminical or Aryan; for he notes (Ch. VI, 62,58) that there were non-Aryan brahmins as well! The contributions made by ancientIndian linguists are echoes of the oral tradition of padapa_t.has (i.e. the word texts which give every word of the sam.hita_31 free from euphonic combinations and analyze compounds into their component morphemes) of the Vedic chants which are as old as civilization. There are other linguistic tracts, in particular in the so-called Dravidian family of languages and in the socalled Austro-Asiatic family of languages (exemplified in India by Mundarica and Santali languages), which preserve the echoes of the ancient speech which sustained ancient civilizations such as the Indus Valley civilization. Ya_ska is perhaps the first etymologist of the world. His Nirukta treats etymology as a complement of grammar (tad idam vidya_-stha_nam vya_karan.asya ka_rtsnyam : N. i.15) and is a principal aid to understanding Vedic texts. According to Ya_ska, grammatical rules are not universal; too much importance should not be attached to the grammatical form because, the complex formations (vr.ttayah-) have many exceptions; he is a bold etymologist who derives is.t.i(sacrifice) from yaj (to sacrifice) based on the meanings of words in thecontext of their use. His principal rule is direct: 'If their meanings are thesame, their etymologies should be the same, if the meanings are different, theetymologies should also be different (N. ii.7); 'words are used to designate objects with regard to everyday affairs in the world, on account of their comprehensiveness and minuteness (N. i.2)[Durga, the commentator, explains 'comprehensiveness' as a psychological process (manifest and unmanifest states of consciousness) to apprehend meaning through the instrumentality of the spoken word; the process is elaborated: manifest consciousness is expressed through an effort of exhalation of breath, modification of speech-organs to produce the word; the word pervades the unmanifest consciousness of the 31 Ya_ska defines sam.hita_as the closest conjunction (of original words) by means of euphonic combination or as based on original words. In the padapa _t.ha,i.e. word-for-word analysis, the sandhi is dissolved; each pra_tis'a_khya foreach branch of the Veda specifies how the sam.hita_must be derived from thecorpus of utterances in continuous text. Thus Ya_ ska provides an etymological complement to the word-for-word analysis.

hearer, makes it manifest and the meaning is apprehended. Durga also comments on the term 'minuteness': movements of hands and the winking of the eyes etc. are also comprehensive; they will express the meaning and in this manner there will be no need to study grammar and the Vedic texts! But these are not minute, i.e. these communication modes are not definitive (or accurate) and are not economical in the effort in production.] Ya_ ska notes the four ordclasses,noun, verb, preposition and particle and adds:

... S'a_kat.a_yana holds that nouns are derived from verbs. This, too, is the doctrine of the etymologists. 'Not at all,' says Gargya and some of the grammarians, 'but only those, the accent and grammatical form of which are regular and which are accompanied by an explanatory radical modification.' Those (nouns), such as cow, horse, man, elephant etc. are conventional (terms, and hence are underivable)(Ni. 1.12). Pa _n.ini combines particles (avyaya, 195 in number) and prepositions into one category, nipa _ta (Bk. I, Ch. IV, 56)32. According to Ya_ska, particles are of three types: (i) of comparison (upama),(ii) of adding or putting together of the senses or ideas (karmopasam.graha or semantic sub-clusters), (iii) of expletives which do not express any meaning (kam, i_m, id, u and iva). Ya_ska notes that the verb has 'becoming' as its fundamental notion; and that the noun has 'being' as its fundamental notion and recalls that according to Audumbara _ yan.a speech is permanent in the organs only. This statement of Audumbara_yan.a is fundamental in understanding the neural bases of linguistic competence. Tamil (a primary member of the so-called Dravidian languages) is an ancient language.33 This lexicon contains a number of references from Tamil works,

32 According to R.gvedapra_tis'a_kya (xii.6.702) and Ya_ska, prepositions are twenty and combine with the noun and verb to express a meaning (these are: pra, abhi, a _, para, nih-, duh-, anu, vi, upa, apa, sam, pari, prati, ni, ati,adhi, su, ud, ava and api). Pa_n.ini: pra etc., are called prepositions(karmapravacani_ya) when joined with verbs.' (Bk.I. Ch. IV.58; 83-97). Va_jasaneyipra_tis'a_khya provides the most succinct definition (viii.54): 'A verb denotes an action, and a preposition makes that action specific.' (Pra_tis'a_kyasor pa_rs.adas are the oldest grammatical treatises of different schools based on the original forms of words). 33In Tamil grammar, vat.amor. .i or vat.a-col (Tol. Col. 401) refers to a Sanskrit word (centamir. .kkan. vanta vat.amor. .iyu ma_r-r-a_te_: Ya_pperun.kalam. Virutti.Pakkam. 461 i.e. Sanskrit seeded by refined Tamil does not compare) [kan. Seed as cause (Ci. Po_. 9,3,3); a_r-r-u-tal to be equal to, to compare with (Kur-al.,101); centamir. . is standard Tamil, free from all corruptive elements, opp. To kot.u-n-tamir. . : Tol. Col. 398; centamir. .na_t.u is said to be bounded by the acknowledging the antiquity of the language and its importance as a dominant member of the Indian language family34. Similar references are provided from Vedic texts in many etyma groups. The rich ancient Tamil literature (which dates back to the San.gam age of c. the first millennium A.D.) includes Vaikai-ya _r-u, on the east by Maruvu_r, and on the west by Karuvu_ r : Tol. Col.400, Urai.); kot.u-n-tamir. . is Tamil dialect current in regions surroundingcentamir. .na_t.u (Nan-. 273, Urai.) (Ta.lex.)

34 Any indication of derivatives or so-called 'borrowing' indicated by the sign < in lexicons, should be treated with great caution. No claim is sought to be made that a particular phonetic form was, in fact, derived from another language, just because the sign < has been used (only in a very few semantic clusters) in this lexicon. The sign should be taken to indicate a possible close affinity or geographical extension between the languages involved in the semantic relationship.

Tolka _ppiyam35 (?c. 5th century A.D.), a grammar and socio-linguistic tract; the fifth-century work, Tiruval.l.uvar's Tirukkural., s'aiva religious works such as Tiruva _cakam and Tirumantiram; existential expositions such as Pur-ana_n-u_ru,Akana_n-u_ru (400 poems each on social and family lives); Pattuppa_t.t.u (ten songs) and Et.t.uttokai (eight anthologies) delineating love and war as facets of life.

To quote Caldwell who relates a study of this language to the comparative grammatical structures of a family of the so-called Dravidian languages: "Does there not seem to be reason for regarding the Dravidian family of languages, not only as a link of connection between the Indo-European and Scythian groups, but -- in some particulars, especially in relation to the pronouns -- as the best surviving representative of a period in the history of human speech older than the Indo-European stage, older than the Scythian and older than the separation of the one from the other... The orientalists who supposed the Dravidian languages to be derived from Sanskrit were not aware of the existence of uncultivated languages of the Dravidian family, in which Sanskrit words are not at all, or but very rarely, employed... Another evidence consists in the extraordinary copiousness of the Tamil vocabulary, and the number and variety of the grammatical forms of Shen-Tamil. The Shen-Tamil grammar is a crowded museum of obsolete forms, cast-off inflexions, and curious anomalies... It is a different question whether some of the Dravidian forms and roots may not have formed a portion of the linguistic inheritance, which appears to have descended to the earliest Dravidian from the fathers of the human race." (Caldwell's Comparative Grammar of the Dravidian Family of Languages, p.x, p.45, p.82). In Tolka_ppiyam, Tamil does include the so-called vat.acol (or northern words): vat.acor- kil.avi vat.a l.er. .ut tori_i er. .uttot.u pun.arntacolla_kumme : Tol. Col. 395, i.e. 'northern' words are those words which shed their scripts and are adapted; this is distinguished from 'dialectical' words (centamir. . ... ticai-c-cor- kil.avi) in vogue in the twelve territories of the Tamil land with regional variations and two other kinds of words: iyar--col,tiri-col (primitives and derivatives) used in poetry (ceyyul.).

35 The author is Tolka_ppiyan-, reputed to be a disciple of Agastya, as born in Ka_ppiya-k-kut.i (it.aiccan.kamirunta_r akattiyan-a_run tolka_ppiyan-a_rum : Ir-ai. 1,Pak. 5; tun-n-arun ci_rttit tolka_ppiyan-mutar- pan-n-irupulavarum : Pu. Ve. Cirappuppa_.); Civajna_n-a-mun-

This lexicon establishes the possibility of tracing the etyma for all three patterns of prefixing, agglutinative and inflexional types of morphology in languages. The inflexional languages such as Sanskrit and languages influenced significantly by Sanskrit show a myriad morphological variants. Unlike CDIAL which breaks out the inflexional variants under 'head words' based on assumed 'root words' with an *, this lexicon clusters the variants under semantic clusters. [Thus, for example, √vij36 (move suddenly) can be clustered with ve_ga speed and √vi_j or √vyaj fan and vizun to sift, winnow (K.) As far as practicable, only words listed in the language lexicons are included in the semantic clusters of this lexicon, without making any attempt to derive the ancient phonetic form of the Indian sememe or a

proto-Indian reconstruction of a morpheme with an *.] This lexicon, as does R.L. Turner's A Comparative Dictionary of Indo-Aryan languages (CDIAL), includes a number of words from the Vedic texts37, attesting to the great antiquity of many semantic clusters which are also concordant with the archaeological artifacts unearthed from the Indus Valley civilization and other Indian archaeological explorations. An early attempt to trace the 'sememes' was made in works such as the Dha_tupa_t.ha for Sanskrit and in the brilliant work of the Vedic scholars of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries (following the tradition of Sa_yan.a in the R.gvedabha _s.yabhu_mika_ of an earlier century) who have successfully established the semantic contents of the Vedic texts,38 proving Ya_ska right: "Vedic stanzas are significant, because (their) words are identical (with those of the spoken language)..." (Nirukta 1.16). Sa_yan.a makes a similar comment in his preface to the R.gveda:
va_kya_rtho_lo_kave_dayo_ravis's.t.ah-(the meaning of expressions of the Vedic Sanskrit and of the popular speech is not different) and also notes: 'abhidha_ne_rthava_dahthere Is a figurative description in such expressions... this is very frequently employed in poetical compositions. For instance, a river is described as having a pair of cakrava_ka birds for her breasts, a row of swans for her teeth, a ka_sa plant for her garment, and moss for her hair. Similarly, the Vedic texts invoking inanimate objects should be construed as implying praise...' It can be hypothesized that soma was a similar 'figurative description'.

37 Vedic texts (c. 1200 to 200 B.C.) include the corpus of the R.gveda, Yajurveda, Sa _ maveda, Atharvaveda (s'ruti) and a number of exegetical texts (smr. ti) including the bra_hman.as, a_ran.yakas, upanis.ads, dating from the latter parts of the first millennium B.C. Morphological divergences between classical Sanskrit and the Vedic texts are remarkable. The occurrence of many so-called Dravidian and Munda idioms in and the dialectical heterogeneity of the Vedas are reflected in a number of parallel forms of the texts which were later unified through oral traditions. 38An exception to this statement is the unresolved problem of soma. A variety of interpretations are provided for this word which is the principal process or life-activity elaborated in the R.gveda. The author of this lexicon has interpreted soma as electrum or silver-gold ore, in a separate work in the context of a study of the history of ancient Indian alchemy. This lexicon provides etymological evidence in support of this interpretation. Soma as perhaps, a major process involving the lives of ancients of the Indian language family.

Xli

Grammatical philosophy

Some leads are available to explore further the concept of 'meaning' in philosophical and linguistic terms. "homo foneticus indicus was no mere crosssectioned larynx sited under an empty cranium... on the contrary, the whole man, belly, heart and head, produced voice" (J.E.B. Gray 1959, "An Analysis of Nambudiri R.gvedic Recitation and the Nature of the Vedic Accent", Bulletin of the School of Oriental and African Studies 22, pp. 499-530) A word points to an external object, as a semantic indicator; it also refers to the intention of the speaker. One technical term is 'artha' which may be a synonym of 'meaning'. "For xlii the grammarian, 'artha' does not mean the external reality but whatever the word brings to the mind. Artha does not mean vastvarttha but s'abda _ rtha, not reality, but, the meaning of words. Individual words bring something to the mind and the sentence as a whole also brings something to the mind. But these things are included in the expression 's'abda_rtha'. Grammar studies both these things in order to evolve notions which will explain the forms of the language. Grammar is satisfied if these notions conform to what we understand from words, no matter whether they conform to reality or not. Grammar does not look at reality directly in the face. As Hela_ra_ja puts it: s'abdaprama_n.aka_na_m.hi s'abda eva hi yatha_rtham abhidhatte athaiva tasya_bhidha_nam upapannam; na tuvastumukhapraks.ataya_ : for to those whose authority is the word, the word designates what it corresponds to, and its designation is accordingly appropriate; but it is not for looking reality directly in the face (Hela_ra_ja on Va_kyapadi_ya III. Sam.. verse 66)... Thus while explaining the different conceptions of Time mentioned by Bharttr.hari in the Ka_lasamuddes'a such as that it is an entity which exists apart from the mind or that it is a mere construction of the human mind, Hela_ra_ja says that Bharttr.hari is not really concerned with what time is philosophically, but that he is anxious to examine and analyze that something which is responsible for our putting the Sanskrit verb in different tenses as in abhu _t (was), asti (is) and bhavis.yat (will be).That something may not be able to stand close philosophical scrutiny, but if it serves the purpose of explaining the different tenses, one would have to accept it (Hela_ra_ja on Va_kyapadi_ya. III. Ka_. 58). Similarly in the kriya_samuddes'a, the question is: What is action? The answer given by Bharttr.hari on the basis of the Bha_s.ya passages is that it is a process, something having parts arranged in a temporal sequence. It is not directly perceptible, but it is to be inferred... These parts may be further subdivided and the smaller parts will also be actions. There will come a time when the part cannot be further sub-divided. It cannot then be called action at all. Only that can be called action which has parts arranged in a temporal sequence. After having clearly explained all this, Hela_ra_ja adds that for grammarians the real question is not whether an action has actually parts or not, but whether the verb presents it as such. The answer is that verbs do present action, however momentary, in nature, as something having parts which cannot co-exist but are arranged in a temporal sequence. And Vaiya _karan.as go by what the words present to us. (Hela _ ra _ ja on Va _ kyapadi _ya. III. Kri. 10)." (Subramania Iyer, K.A., "The Point of View of the Vaiya _karan.as", Journal of Oriental Research, 18, pp.84-96, 1948).Vya_d.i (Sarvadars'ana-sam.graha, Bibliographica Indica, pp. 140-4) notes that since letters by themselves cannot convey meaning, a unifying factor can be hypothesized; the factor (sphot.a) which is all-pervading and exists independent of letters. sphot.a is the idea which bursts out or flashes on the mind when a sound is uttered, the impression produced on the mind at hearing a sound: budhairvaiya _karan.ah- pradha_na bhu_ta sphot.a ru_pavyan.gyanjakasya s'abdasyadhaviniriti vyavaha_rah kr.tah (Ka_vyapraka_s'a. 1; it is also the eternal sound recognized by the Mi_ma_m.sakas or inquirers (Skt. lex.) It connotes he relationship between sounds and meaningful words. sphut.ati praka_s'ate'rtho' sma_d iti sphot.o va_caka iti ya_vat (Kon.d.abhat.t.a, Vya_karan.a-bhu_s.an.a (Bombay, 1915, p.236); Na_ges'abhat.t.a, Sphot.ava_da (Adyar Library, 1946), p.5). Ma_dhava, Sarvadars'anasam.graha (ed. Abhyankar, p. 300), gives the double explanation that the sphot.a is revealed by the letters, and itself reveals the meaning: sphut.yate vyajyate varn.air iti sphot.o

varn.a_bhivyan.gyah-, sphut.ati sphut.i_bhavaty asma_d artha iti sphot.o' rthapratya_yakah-. "The sphot.a then is simply the linguistic sign in its aspect of meaning-bearer (bedeutungstrager). The term sphot.a occurs first in the Maha _bha_s.ya, Na_ges'a ascribed the doctrine to Sphot.a_yana, who is quoted by Pa_n.ini(vi.1.123) on a point of morphology... the sphot.a (the unchanging substratum)is the word, the sound is merely an attribute of the word. How? Like a drumbeat.

When a drum is struck, one drum-beat may travel twenty feet, another thirty, another forty. But the sphot.a is of precisely such and such a size, the increase in length is caused by the sound... Patanjali's sphot.a (except in so far as it is for him the meaning-bearer) is really comparable to Bharttr.hari's pra_kr.ta-dhvani. The commentators, being acquainted with the later theory, naturally point out that the speed of utterance belongs to the vaikr. ta-dhvani... Bharttr.hari (Va_kya-padi_ya i.44 : dva_v upa_da_nas'abdes.u s'abdau s'abdavido viduh- eko nimittam. s'abda_na_m aparo'rthe prayujyate : in meaningful language, linguists recognize two (entites which can be called) words: one is the underlying cause of words, the other is attached to the meaning... The Nya_ya philosophers for example, held that the meaning of a word was presented to the mind by the last sound, aided by the memory-impression of the preceding sounds... Va_kyapadi_ya i. 75-8: sphot.asya_bhinnaka_ lasya dhvanika_la_nupa_tinahgrahan.opa_dhibhedena vr.ttibhedam. pracaks.ate; svabha_vabheda_n nityatve hrasva-di_rgha-pluta_dis.u pra_kr.tasya dhvaneh- ka_lah- s'abdasyety upacaryate; varn.asya grahan.

Similarly, in the case of the short, long, and prolate vowels-- since, on the view that these are permanent, they are intrinsically distinct-- it is the time-pattern of the primary sound which is metaphorically attributed to the word (the sphot.a) itself. The 'primary sound' (pra_kr.ta-dhvani) is defined as the cause of the perception of the letters (phonemes), the 'secondary sound' (vaikr.ta-dhvani, literally 'modified') is the causal factor underlying differences of diction. But it is only after the word has been revealed that the secondary sounds are presented to the mind as differences of diction; hence (a fortiori) the essential nature of the sphot.a is not disrupted by these... Ma_dhava's statement : varn.a_tiriktovarn.a_bhivyan.gyo' rthapratya_yako nityah-s'abdah- sphot.a iti tadvido vadanti may be translated as 'the abiding word which is the conveyor of the meaning... is called the sphot.a by the grammarians'..." (Brough, John "Theories of General Linguistics in the Sanskrit Grammarians", Transactions of the Philological Society, pp. 27-46, 1951). The padapa_t.has break down the sam.hita_ into its constituent words; Ya_ska's Nirukta studies the meaning of some of such words.

Thus the phonetics of a word and its meaning are integral components of Vedic studies. Va_rttika defines a grammatical sentence as eka-tin. i.e. possessing one verb. (Va_kyapadi_ya ii.3). "The Bha_t.t.a school (of the later Mi_ma_m.sa) on the whole seems to preserve the more primitive attitude. According to them words have in themselves meanings, and as the words are uttered in a sentence, each word performs its task of expressing its meaning, and the sentence is the summation of these meanings. The Pra_bha_kara school, on the other hand, held the more sophisticated theory that the individual words did not express any meaning until they were united together into a sentence. This was upheld by an appeal to the method whereby a child learns its own mother tongue.

They pointed out that it was by hearing sentences 'fetch the cow', 'fetch the horse', and so forth, that the child came gradually to understand that the animal which he saw on each several occasion was, in fact, either a cow or a horse and that the action performed by his elders was the act of fetching. These two views were named respectively abhihita_nvaya-va_da and anvita_bhidha_nava_da, terms which are troublesome to translate by concise English expressions.

Roughly speaking, the first is the theory that the sentence is 'a series of expressed word-meanings', and the second is that the sentence is 'the expressed meaning of a series (of words)' ... At the beginning of the second book of the Va_kyapadi_ya, Bharttr.hari gives a list of definitions and quasidefinitions of a sentence. Five of these are grouped by the commentator under the traditional Mima_m.sa_designations. Thus the view that the sentence is a unified collection (sam.gha _ta) and the view that it is an ordered series(krama) are aspects of the abhihita_nvaya-va_da; while the other three belong to the anvita_bhidha_na-va_da. These are, that the sentence is defined by a verbal expression (a_khya_ta-s'abda) or by the first word (padam a_dyam) or by all the words taken separately with the feature of mutual requirement or expectancy superadded (pr.thak sarvapadam. sa_ka_n.ks.am). All these views, of course, imply the feature of expectancy39, and the first and second are to be explained with reference to this feature, since the verb or the first word is only what it is in view of its ties with the other words in its own sentence. All these theories are adversely criticized by Bharttr.hari... The occurrence of homophones in a language has always provided grammarians with an interesting problem... Bharttr.hari gives a list of such factors, of which the most important are va_kya, sentence-context, and prakaran.a, situational context...historical and comparative studies frequently enable us to glean from texts in related languages useful hints towards this understanding (of meaning)... In the end the utmost that can be said of the meaning of a sentence according to Bharttr.hari is that it is grasped by an instantaneous flash of insight (pratibha_)(Va_kyapadi_ya, ii.119,145)... And when we have understood a sentence, we cannot explain to another the nature of this understanding. (Va_kyapadi_ya,ii.146: idam. ad iti sa_nyes.am ana_khyeya_katham.cana : pratya_tmavr.ttisiddha_sa_

39 In neurosciences, an axiom is that the brain 'perceives' what it wants to perceive. At another level of analysis or 'brain theory', it may be stated that the brain is a 'variance machine', selectively recording only changes or 'variances' from the 'previously recorded experiences or perceptions'.

kartra_pi na hiru_pyate : This (pratibha_) cannot in any way be explained to others in terms such as 'it is this'; its existence is ratified only in the individual's experience of it, and the experiencer himself cannot describe it)." (Brough, John, "Some Indian Theories of Meaning", Transactions of the Philological Society, 1953, pp. 161-176)40. There is no supreme language; all languages are personal and social experiences of a community. Yet, every language is governed by an extraordinary phonetic repertoire orchestrated by 'neuronal laws' of the human brain. 40 cf. Kunjunni Raja, K., Indian Theories of Meaning, Madras, 1963.

The neuronal structures in which verbal creativity is embedded are the common substratum; they are language-neutral. This means, that irrespective of the language used by a speaker, or the language heard by a listener, the neurons and neuronal networks pulsate, governed by the as-yet undefined semantic laws of neurosciences. Man can create poetry; if the poem has to convey meaning to the audience, the poet has to abandon his search for the 'perfect' language and bow to the superior wisdom of the common parlance which is,in effect, the linguistic social contract for which words are but social memory-markers, or 'nume'raire facile.' The private memory-markers in the private language of a speaker's or listener's brain are the product of his life-history which can be 'emotionally' or 'neuronally' experienced.

No scientific technique is relevant, no language is adequate and no poet is competent to communicate the emotions of the 'private language' of the brain.

94.Celery: ajamoda_ apium graveolens (Car. Su. 4.6,45); di_pyaka id. (Car.Ci. 5.69,71, 6.27,38). Apium graveolens: celery seed; epich (Ger.); ache celeri (Fr.); part used: the dried ripe fruit; habitat: southern Europe... celery fruit was shipped from British India also... Uses: stimulant and condiment; as a flavouring agent in salads, soups, sauces, tomato juice, pickles, and in the manufacture of celery salt... which is a mixture of finely ground celery fruit and free-running sodium chloride (tabel salt). (Heber W. Youngken, Textbook of Pharmacognosy, Philadelphia, The Blakiston Co., 1950, pp. 621-623). Apium graveolens. (Ancient Egyptian m3tt; Coptic mit; Greek teginon; Modern Egyptian Arabic karafs). "Celery grows wild in Africa, Europe and Americas... It was once used as a slimming herb. Celery grows in Egyptian gardens today as it did in pharaonic times, at least towards the end of the New Kingdom (c. 1000 BC). Garlands have been found on mummies from this period, where celery leaves alternated with petals of nymphae caerulea. The plant is frequently mentioned in Egyptian texts. Dioscorides gave the Egyptian name as mith, which through Coptic has been identified with ancient Egyptian m3tt. This is easily confused with the name for parsley, which is called 'mountain celery' (apium petroselinum) ... Celery was used to... stimulate appetite... as a remedy to treat the teeth... a remedy to cool the uterus... as a contraceptive after fumigation with emmer seeds... a large dose of the related apium petroselinum was once thought to be capable of causing abortion (Prospero Alpini)... it was used in a remedy proven good for burns 'in the days of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Amenophis III (f1567-1320 BC).'... a remedy to stop blood in the eye... a remedy for the temples... for a painful stomach." (Lise Manniche, An Ancient Egyptian Herbal, British Museum Publications Ltd., pp.76-77). (GIMP, pp.21-22). Apium petroselinum = petroselinum crispum = petroselinum sativum = carum petroselinum (English parsley); frequently cultivated in India (GIMP, p.189). Apium petroselinum: (Ancient Egyptian m3tt h3st; Coptic gat or ceginh; Greek teginon; Modern Egyptian Arabic baqdu_nis). "The essential oil (of parsley) stimulates the appetite and regulates menstruation... (as mountain celery) it occurs in a few medical prescriptions (in Egyptian texts) for pain in the stomach or to 'contract the urine'." (Lise Manniche, An Ancient Egyptian Herbal, p.78).

It is also employed as a lamp oil... Flax was grown from a very early date in Egypt, as finds of the fibres show. The earliest record of linseed oil dates from the Ptolemaic period, but the oil was undoubtedly in use much earlier as a cooking and lamp oil... Leaves of flax, cyperus grass, a liquid and an unidentified ingredient were made into a suppository to treat swelling at the anus (haemorrhoids?) and "heat" in the belly was eased with a preparation containing capsules of the tips of flax... A bandage for the nails of the fingers or toes was made of ochre, linseed, an unidentified part of the sycamore fig, honey and oil or fat.' Ghats, the Nilgiris, Pulneys and Travancore, above 5,000 ft. (GIMP, p.124). Gaultheria oil (oleum gaultheriae): methyl salicylate; oil of teaberry, oil of checkerberry, natural oil of winter-green; wintergrunol (Ger.); essence de gaultheria (Fr.); botanical origin: gaultheria procumbens; part used: the volatile oil obtained by distillation from the leaves of plants; commercially, the oil is produced by chopping up the green leaves or plants, moistening with water and placing these in the retort of a copper sill or improvised charred oak barrel with a perforated bottom where the moistened material is covered with water... and macerated overnight. The perforated bottom fits tightly over a water-filled kettle, and the upper end of the barrel is connected by means of a copper helmet with a spiral condenser. In the morning a fire is built beneath the retort and distillation proceeds. The heavy oil is collected in flasks and the aqueous distillate transferred to the sill for a second charge... Uses: oil of wintergreen as well as oil of sweet birch and synthetic methyl salicylate are used as stimulant, rubefacient, antirheumatic and flavouring agents. (Heber W. Youngken, Textbook of Pharmacognosy, Philadelphia, The Blakiston Co., 1950, pp. 643-645). {Note the occurrence of pots with perforated bottoms in Indus civilization and possible use in distillation retorts.}

The timber is hard and heavy and durable, and is one of the best possible for all purposes where great strength is required. The resin which exudes from this tree is used medicinally and in the arts; the mimosia rubicaulis (Punjabi.lex.) For -ka_rya in ra_la-ka_rya the sa_la tree (Skt.lex.) cf. Sterculia gum (gum stercullae): a_r..al, na_r..al name of various plants, cassia sophera, caesalpina pulcherrima, cochlospermum gossypium, crocus sativus (Ta.)(DEDR 2915). ka_rpa_si_ gossypium barbadens (Car. Ci. 7.96). Synonyms of stercuia gum: gum karaya; the dried gummy exudation from sterculia urens, sterculia villosa, sterculia tragacantha or other species of sterculia or from cochlospermum gossypium or other species of cochlospermum (fam. bixaceoe); the sterculia species are tropical trees mostly native to Asia... cochlospermum gossypium is a small tree native to India... golden yellow flowers in panicles and many seeded capsular fruits... the gum occurs in tears or in broken irregular pieces the latter somewhat crystalline-like and known commercially as 'crystal gum', pale yellow to pinkish brown, translucent and horny... odour slightly acetous... Uses: in lotions and pastes; industrially as a size for paper, in printing gum, nicotine sprays etc... An Indian gum termed karaya or kadaya gum, is yielded by cochlospermum religiosum, a member of the bixaceoe family, growing in India and adjacent countries. This article is largely used by the paste, cigar and ice cream industries... (Heber W. Youngken, Textbook of Pharmacognosy, Philadelphia, The Blakiston Co., 1950, pp. 560; 456-459). Sterculia urens: gulu (M.); karrai (H.); bhutali (Ka.); pandruk (Konkan.i); tonti (Ma.); vellaipputtali (Ta.); ponaku (Te.); gum: used as substitute for tragacanth; used in throat affections: leaves: useful in pleuro-pneumonia in cattle; habitat: Gujarat, Konkan, Deccan, N. Kanara, S. Mahrata country, dry forests of the Madras State, Rajputana, N. and Central India and Chota Nagpur (GIMP, p.234). Cochlospermum gossypium = bombax gossypium Linn.: A small tree, 2.4 to 5.4 m. high, with a branching head; bark smooth, ash-coloured; flowers bright yellow (Indian Medicinal Plants, pp.214-215, Vol.I). The fibers from the pods of bombax pentandrum Linn. (which contain numerous black seeds which are compressed-globose, smooth and embedded in fine, silky fibres) are very extensively used for stuffing pillows, cushions, and mattresses and are excellent for these purposes. {English name: kapok, white silk cotton tree} Kapok oil, which is extracted from the seeds, is used for the manufacture of soap and as a substitute for cotton-seed oil. (Quisumbing, E., Medicinal Plants of the Philippines, p.598). soho doho bombax malabaricum (Santali.lex.) {"Gum and resin were added to ointments not only for their own scent, but also to fix the fragrance of other ingredients, just as they are an optional ingredient of potpourri today. Apart from their use in fumigation, frankincense and myrrh were frequently required in medical prescriptions. Frankincense occurs as light yellowish-brown 'tears' on certain trees of the genus boswellia which grow in Southern Arabia and on the Somali coast, or on the commiphora pedunculata in eastern Sudan and Ethiopia. The Egyptians obtained it from the land of Punt, which has not been definitively placed on the map, although it seems most likely to have been in the region of Somalia. Myrrh, consisting of yellowish-red 'tears', is obtained from commiphora. It was also imported from or via Punt. Large quantities of these commodities were needed in Egypt for the daily cult in the temples, in the funerary ritual, and in cosmetics and medicine... Dioscorides quotes a recipe for a marjoram unguent called sampsuchum. Since he uses the Egyptian plant name it may have been an Egyptian specialty... Theophrastus comments that the scent of sweet marjoram unguent was as durable as that of 'The Egyptian'... Both Pliny (NH. XII. li) and Dioscorides (I.124) mention a tree called cyprus, of which the best quality grew at Canopus in the Delta. It has been identified as henna (lawsonia inermis) which does indeed have fragrant flowers... Pliny explicitly says that unguents keep best in 'alabaster' containers (NH. XIII. iii)... Another aromatic substance, used abundantly by Egyptian priests, was so important that the recipe was engraved on the walls of the temples and repeated in the works of the classical authors... we must still rely on an article from 1887 (V. Loret, 'Le Kyphi', Journal Asiatique, 8e serie, X, 1857, pp. 76-132). "Plutarch gives a list of sixteen ingredients used by the Egyptians in preparing kuphi -- honey, wine, raisins, sweet rush, resin, myrrh, frankincense, seselis, calamu, asphalt, thryon, dock, both kinds of arceuthids, cardamum, and orris root (De Isid, 81)... the compounding was of ritual importance and a matter of mystery. Sacred books were read aloud while the kuphi was being mixed." (James Hastings (ed.), Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics, New York, Charles Scribner's sons, 1915, p.201).The famous kyphi was an oil- and fat-free scent, based on wine and raisins with a number of added aromatic herbs and resins. It was not used to perfume the body, but it was burnt in the temples... In ancient times, kyphi was also added to beverages. Kyphi. Take 1/2 pint of cyperus (bulrush, 'thickening' agent) and 1/2 pint juniper berries; 12 lb stoned plum raisins; 5 lb resin; 1 lb aromatic rush; 1 lb asphalatus (identified as cytisus lanigerus, genista acanthoclada or calycotome villosa); 1 lb iuncus odoratus (cymbopogon schoenanthus); 1 1/2 oz myrrh; 8 1/2 pint old wine; and 2 lb honey... The hieroglyphic recipes are written on the walls of the temples of Edfu and Philae... Recipe for making 10,164 g of excellent kyphi: 1. Take 270 g each of acorus calamus (sweet flag; ancient Egyptian kni; Modern Egyptian Arabic wag; rhizome qas.ab el-zori_ra; applied in a bandage is said to have cured a pustule on the finger of the Prophet.); andropogon schoenanthus (aromatic rush; the 'sweet cane' which is the source of palmarosa oil); pistachio resin; cassia; ti-sps (cinnamon? or East African camphor tree cinnamonium camphora or ocotea usambarensis; the constituents of the roots cinnamonium zeylanicum and cinnamonium camphora are very similar, but traditionally ti-sps is taken to mean cinnamon; in classical texts cinnamon is often confused with cassia, cinnamonium cassia... Prospero Alpini knew thin quills as qirfa, whereas thick quills were called da_rsi_ni. The evergreen cinnamon tree is native to Ceylon, whereas cassia originated in China and Burma. It was thus imported into Egypt... Theophrastus says that a perfume called megaleion was made of burnt resin and balanos oil to which is added cassia, cinnamon and myrrh. pp.88-89); db (aspalathos?); total 1870 g. Grind and sieve. Only the powder is to be used, 1/5 of total = 756 g. 2. Take 270 g each of juniper berries; an unidentified plant; pkr-plant; cyperus longus; total 1080 g. Grind. Add to this 2250 g wine. Leave until the next morning. Half the wine will be abosorbed by the herbs. The rest is to be discarded. 3. Take 1800 g raisins and 2250 g oasis wine. Grind together well. Remove the rind and pips of the raisins (weighing 1350 g). Place the rest (weighing 2700 g) in a pot with the herbs. Leave for five days. 4. Mix 1200 g frankincense and 3000 g honey in a vessel. Boil gently until thickened and reduced by 1/5, the total weight being 3360 g. Mix with the other ingredients and leave for five days. 5. Add to this 1143 g finely ground myrrh, and you will have 10,164 g kyphi... Cinnamon (Ancient Egyptian ti-sps; Coptic kinamwmon; Modern Egyptian Arabic qirfa) was used in incense. cf. wall-painting in the tomb of Queen Nefertari, Thebes; Ramesside... used in a fumigation 'which one makes to make the smell of the house or the dress pleasant'... cinnamon or cassia are the only true species actually to be mentioned in connection with mummification... What appears to be cinnamon has been found on actual mummies... A mummy from the 20th Dynasty (Ramesses III-XI; 1200-1085 BC)... still retains the faint smell of cinnamon or cassia... Another mummy examined in the last century was also said to be filled with the dust of cedar, cassia etc... Cinnamon was among the items presented to the temples by the king. In a papyrus listing the revenue ceded to the various gods by Ramesses III, there is a frequent mention of measures of cinnamon. Once in the temple, the goods would pass into the hands of the priests who would either recirculate them in exchange for other commodities, or, since they formed the medical profession as well, use it in their preparations of drugs... The king's gift to the god Amun included one whole log, 246 measures and 82 bundles... Earlier on, in the 18th Dynasty (1567-1320 BC), when Queen Hatshepsut sent out her famous expedition to the land of Punt in search of incense and spices, the ships were loaded for their homeward journey not only with frankincense and myrrh, but with other fragrant woods, including cinnamon. [cf. Relief in the temple of Hatshepsut at Deir el-Bahari]. Wherever the land of Punt may have been located, cinnamon trees did not grow there. Punt was once part of the chain of commerce which spread from the East to Africa and Europe, and cinnamon was one of the costly commodities which made the long journey. In the 19th Dynasty (1320-1200 BC) Sethos I also connects cinnamon with Punt when displaying to the god Amun how he has conqured the world: 'I turn my face to the East, I work a wonder for you... I gather together all the countries of Punt, all their tribute of gum and myrrh and cinnamon and all the pleasant sweet wood of the God's land.' Land of Punt: "It was a constant tradition among the Egyptians that they originally hailed from the Land of Punt... (Heras locates Punt in the southern tip of Arabia on the Red Sea, in the neighbourhood of Minaei, Yemen (Saba) and above the horn of Somaliland and Sokotra island on the Erythraen sea)... Egyptians themselves used to locate it across the Red Sea in the land of the frankincense... The incense tree (shown in the carvings) of Deir el-Bahari... the tree of myrrh... covered with luxuriant foliage (Fig.211)... the frankincense in Arabia of Dhofar, the 'sachalitic' frankincense of the Periplus, the modern shehri luban... clearly the boswellia carteri... this frankincense is always called in the Deir el-Baari inscriptions 'anti incense', which is an Arabic word a-a-nete, which means 'three eyes'... for the Egyptians to say 'anti incense' was tantamount to saying 'Arabian incense'... Virgil avers twice that incense comes only from the Sabaeans, who were some of the inhabitants of Yemen: India mittit ebur; molles sua tura Sabaei 'Ivory sends India; the soft Sabaens their incense'... Sola India nigrum Fert ebanum; solis est turea virga Sabaeis 'The ebony black is only possessed by India; the incense twigs by the Sabaeans only'. The same is recorded by Pomponius Mela: 'The country which spreads between the two seas is named Arabia, and styled Eudaemon (Eudaimon, now modern Aden), a narrow strip, but very fertile bearing cinnamon, frankincense and other aromatic substances'... Pliny... 'There is no country in the world that produces frankincense except Arabia... almost in the very center of that region are the Atramitae, a community of the Sabaei, the capital of whose kingdom is Sabota, a place situated in a lofty mountain. At a distance of eight stations from this is the incense-bearing region, known by the name of Sab (Abana)... Adjoining are the Minaei... the sole transit for the frankincense... The Minaei were the first people who carried on any traffic in frankincense... It is the Sabaei alone, and no other people among the Arabians, that behold the incense tree; and not all of them, for not over 3,000 families have a right to that privilege by hereditary succession; for this reason these persons are called sacred, and are not allowed, while pruning the trees or gathering the harvest, to be defiled, either by intercourse with women or coming in contact with the dead; by these religious observances it is that the price of the commodity is so enhanced... they make an incision on the tree... an unctuous foam oozes forth, which gradually thickens and coagulates... received upon mats of palm leaves... is of a white color.' (Pliny, XII, 3a.)... there is still another product which seems to have been found in abundance in the country of Punt. That is cinnamon... 'one of the marvels of the country of Punt' (according to the inscriptiosn of Queen Hatshepsut)... there is no sign of cinnamon in Somaliland... Marco Polo mentions cinnamon as growing in Malabar and Ceylon (Franspton, The Most Noble and Famous Travels of Marco Polo, pp.113 and 128)... Discorides... "Arabia... is the only country which produces frankincense, myrrh, cassia, cinnamon and laudanum'... Herodotus narrates that the phoenix comes to Egypt from Arabia, wherefrom it brings a ball of myrrh to the temple of Ra_ at Helipolis (Herodotus, III,107)... the bird that brings cinnamon and sprigs of incense is called in Arabic khol... Theophrastus, Atheneus and Strabo allude to the wealth of Arabia in aromatic plants... We hear of several expeditions from Egypt to get the natural riches of the Land of Punt. The first of these we know of took place under the Pharaoh Sahure of the Vth Dynasty (28th cnetury BC)... another expedition by the last king of the XIth Dynasty Mentuhetep IV Sankhkara, under the leadership of his admiral Hannu. The fleet sailed from Koseir, at the entrance of the Wa_di Hamma_ma_t, reached PUnt and, laden with gums, incense and aromatic spices produced there, returned in safety (Breasted, A History of Egypt, p.153; Flinders Petrie, History of Egypt, I, p.142)... expedition sent by the famous Queen Hatshepsut of the XVIIIth Dynasty (C. 1503-1481 BC)... results recorded and graphically illustrated on the walls of the rock and temple of Deir dl-Bahari... the people of Punt, as they are represented in those carvings, are not Semitic, as Arabs proper should be. Thei type, as it should be from what we know of the history of Yemen, is Hamitic... The Minaei were excellent merchants and their trade, especially in spices and incense, was very brisk (Encyclopaedia of Islam, pp. 377-379). The name Agur of one of the few kings of this nation known to us, is thoroughly Dravidian. All these details seem to indicate the enterprising Indian traders of the Proto-Indian period... The Minaeans of Yemen had an independent writing, which is acknowledged as a development of the Proto-Indian script of the Indus Valley inscriptions (Hunter, The Script of Harappa and Mohenjodaro and its connection with other Scripts, p.22)... Land of Punt... inhabited by people who according to all evidence, had originally come from India... The Periplus remarks that the inhabitants of Sokotra are 'a mixture of Arabs and Indians and Greeks who have emigrated to carry on trade there'... 'no one given spot in the reach of the ancients could produce at one and the same time so many of the coveted products of that day-- the ruby coloured dragon's blood (draco kinnabari of Piny), three distinct species of frankincense, several kinds of myrrh, besides many other valuable gum-producing trees, and aloes of super-excellent quality'. (Bent, Southern Arabia, pp.343-344)... The Achemenian King Darius in an inscription at Nakht-i-Rustam, near Persepolis, calls it (Sokotra) iskuduru, which seems to be a corrupt repetition of the sounds of sukha_da_ra. In an Egyptian tale of the XIIIth Dynasty (18th century BC), the island is spoken of as paa-enka, which is translated 'Island of the Genius', and happens to be the Home of the King of the Incense Land... incense bearing country panchaia, mentioned by Virgil... 'totaque thuriferis panchaia pinguis arenis: the whole Panchaia rich in incense (impregnated) sands'..." (Rev. H. Heras, Studies in Proto-Indo-Mediterranean Culture, Bombay, Indian Historical Research Institute, 1953, pp. 339-360)]. Vateria indica: "Vateria... Resinous trees... habitat: Seychelles, South India. The resin of vateria indica is used medicinally. A large and very handsome tree; bark whitish; young branches and inflorescence clothed with hoary, shellate pubescence; leaves: ellpitic-oblong, sharply pointed or obtuse, cordate or rounded at the base, glabrous.... distribution: Western India: from N. Kanara to Travancore up to 3,500 to 4,000 ft. chiefly in evergreen forests, but occasionally along rivers in deciduous forests. In Coorg both in the Ghat forest and east of the Ghats up to 3,500 ft., in the latter locally always in evergreen forest. The bark is hot with a sharp, bitter, acrid taste; alexipharmac, cures cough, anaemia, ear diseases, urinary discharges, skin eruptions, ulcers and wounds; useful in dysentery, leprosy, itch (Ayurved). The resin is of three kinds -- reddish, dark, slightly white; bitter, becoming more bitter as it gets older; alexipharmac, tonic, carminative, expectorant, detergent; good for sore throat and in chronic bronchitis, piles, rheumatism, amenorrhoea, diarrhoea, hemicrania, tuberculous glands, boils, and ringworm; the smoke is good in painful piles and beneficial to the foetus in pregnant women (Yunani). Under the influence of gentle heat, the resin combines with wax and oil and forms an excellent resinous ointment; it forms a good substitute for official resin. Fine shavings are administered internally to check diarrhoea. The fruit yields a solid fatty oil, which has obtained considerable repute as local application in chronic rheumatism and some other painful affections. Arabic: mukilijraka; Bengal: chundrus; Bombay: ral; Canarese: bilidhupa, biluguggula, dhupa, dhupada, dupa, guggula, maddidhupa, mandadupa, rala, shandike; Coorg: bilidupa; Deccan: sufeddamar; English: Indian copal tree, piney varnish tree, white dammer tree; Greek: sandaraki; Hindi: kahruba, sageddamar, sandras; Malayalam: kunturukkam, pantam, payani, payin, perumpayani, telli, vellakkunturukkam; Persian: buejhudan; Sanskrit: ajakarna, dhupa, kundura, mandadhupa, marichapatraka, pitaphada, sarjaka, shala; Sinhalese: hal, haldumula; Tamil: attam, kukkil, kukkulu, kundurukkam, kungiliyam, kungulu, sadagulai, tubam, vellaikkundurukkam, vellaikkungiliyam; Telugu: dupadamaru, telladamaru, tellaguggilamu; Tulu: lobhana, paini, tandoligeda; Urdu: guggul." (Indian Medicinal Plants, Vol. I, pp.291-293). Shorea: Shorea: resiniferous trees. Leaves entire or repand, with parallel nerves; stipules large... All the species abound in various kinds of copalline resins. The following are used medicinally: in the Philippine islands: shorea guiso, shorea malaanonan, shorea mangachapuy; in Cambodia: shorea cambodiana, shorea harmandii; official: the oil from the seeds of shorea stenoptera in Holland; the resin from shorea wiesneri and other species in Russia and Spain; from various species in Austria. Shorea robusta (Plate 113): a deciduous tree, seldom quite leafless, bark dark brown, smooth or with a few longitudinal cracks. Leaves 10-30 by 5-18 cm., ovate-oblong, acuminate, tough, thinly coriaceous, glabrous and shining when mature, base cordate or rounded, lateral nerves 12-15 pairs; petiole 1.2-2 cm. long... flowers... yellowish... fruit 1.2 cm. long, ovoid, acute, indehiscent, pubescent... Distribution: Kangra district of the Punjab, from the Kalesar forest in the Ambala district along the sub-Himalayan tract to the Darrang district of Assam, sometimes in the outer Himalayan valleys up to 5,000 ft.; Garo hills, Kamrup, Khasia hills, jaintia hills, from the Santal Paraganas through Chota nagpur and Orissa to Ganjam, Jeypore, Central Provinces, Vizagapatam. The bark and leaves are oily, hot, bitter, and acrid; anthelmintic, alexeteric; cures ulcers and wounds, itch, leprosy, gonorrhoea; enrich the blood, stop perspiration, improve the complexion; good in cough, diseases of the vatgina, carache, headache. The fruit is sweet and cooling; aphrodisiac, astringent, cholagogue, tonic; causes 'vata'; useful in thirst, burning, tubercular ulcers, and blood troubles. The resin is cooling but difficult to digest; bitter and acrid; astringent to the bowels; purifies the blood; lessens perspiration and fever; good for wounds, ulcers, burns, pains, itching, fractures, useful in dysentery; good for vaginal discharges (Ayurved). The resin has a bad taste and smell; tonic to the brain; good in menorrhagia, enlargement of the spleen, obesity, ulcers, and wounds; useful in toothache; as a collyrium good for eyesores and burning of the eye. The oil is good for skin diseases, scabies, and all kinds of wounds (Yunani). The resin is regarded as astringent and detergent. It is used in dysentery, and for plasters and fumigations. It is commonly given for weak digestion, gonorrhoea, and as an aphrodisiac. Asafoetida is an oleo-gum-resin obtained by incision from the living rhizome and root of ferula foetida = ferula rubricaulis, and other species of ferula (Fam. umbelliferae), plants about 3m. in height. The drug is collected in Iran, Pakistan and Afghanistan. History: It appears doubtful whether the substance known to the ancients as laser was the asafoetida of modern commerce. Asafoetida seems to have been introduced from the East by the Arabian physicians. It was used in Europe during the Middle Ages but to a much less extent than galbanu, sagepenum and opopanax. Allied drugs: Galbanum and ammoniacum are oleo-gum-resins obtained, respectively from ferula galbaniflua and dorema ammoniacum. Uses: Asafoetida is now little used in human medicine, although still employed in veterinary work, and is an ingredient of certain sauces. (G.E. Trease and W.C. Evans, Pharmacognosy, 12th edn., London, Bailliere Tindall, 1983, pp. 469-470). Ferula asafoetida: hin:gu (Skt.); hing (B.H.); Sanskrit writers describe asafoetida as an exudation from the root of the asafoetida plant which is indigenous to Persia, Khorasan and Multan (?). Assafoetida is regarded as a stimulant and carminative and is much used in dyspepsia, flatulence, colic and diseases of the nervous system. It is fried before being used internally. Raw or unfried asafoetida is said to cause vomiting. (Sanskrit Materia Medica, p.176).

Is one of the Coromandel plants; it yields a fragrant copal-like resin which reduced to powder, forms a popular styptic amongst the Burmese; its action is probably purely mechanical (Nadkarni, K.M., Indian Materia Medica, 1st edn., 1908; rev. edn., 1982, Bombay, Popular Prakashan Pvt. Ltd., p. 653). Hopea odorata: resinous tree, glabrous or hary-tomentose... used medicinally in Cambodia. The gum resin of several species is official in Austria. Hopea odorata = hopea decandra: Evergreen, good yellowish brown, closed-and even-grained, very durable. Glabrous, except inforescence. Leaves ovate-lanceolate, secondary nerves 12 pairs. Flowers fragrant, in axillary grey-tomentose panicles... Distribution: from Pegu and Tenasserim to Cochin-China, Andamans. Amont the Burmese the resin, reduced to powder, forms a popular styptic. In Cambodia the bark is used as an astringent in gingivitis. Andamans: rimda; Burma: thengan; Cambodia: koki (Indian Medicinal Plants, p. 291). Hopea odorata: Burmese: thengan. Resin: in powder used as styptic; bark: astringent; copal-like resin. (GIMP, p. 136). Hopea racemosa = styrax benzoin, Dryand. (Styraceae). English: benzoin tree; (resin) gum benzoin. luban resin (H.B.M.); oodh (M.); shambirani (Ta.). Is a native of the Malay peninsula (lower Siam) and Sumatra. Gum benzoin flowing from the incised stem-bark of the tree and which is largely imported into India from Penang contains three resins, benzoic acid cinnamic acid, vanillin and volatile oil. Benzoin is antiseptic, disinfectant, stimulant and expectorant. It is used throughout India as an incense. It is the source of benzoic acid which is largely used in medicine as aromatic, stimulant, expectorant, antiseptic and styptic. When burnt its vapour is used as deodorant and antiseptic, in sick rooms and hospitals. As diuretic it is useful in calculous disorders from phosphatic deposits in the urine. Its combinations with alkalies, viz., ammonia, potash and soda, called benzoates, are more decidedly diuretic and useful in dropsy and gouty concretions... Its compound tincture, popularly known as friar's balsam or traumatic balsam has been employed as a styptic and healing application; a piece of lint or soft rag dipped into it and wrapped over cut surfaces will usually stay the haemorrhage and effect a cure... A teaspoonful of the tincture added to a quart of water forms a milk-- lait virginal-- largely employed in the toilet and for bathing irritable skin eruptions. (Indian Materia Medica, pp. 535-536). Aegle Marmelos: bilva, bilvam, sriphal (sri = goddess of abundance; phal = fruit; it is an emblem of riches or fertility; Bengal quince, bael fruit (Eng.); bel, bael sripal (H.); bilivaphal, bilinuphal (G.); baela (M.); bilvamu, bilvapandu, maredu (Te.); vilvam, vilva-pazham, bilvam (Ta.); belapatre (Ka.); koovalam, vilvam (Ma.); bela, bael (B.); katori (Si.); maika (Gond); shul (Pers.); habitat: found all over India, from sub-Himalayan forests, Bengal, central and south India and in Burma; parts used: fruit (both ripe and unripe), root-bark, leaves, rind of the ripe fruit and flowers... fresh leaves yield in distillation a yellowish-green oil with a peculiar aromatic odour... (Indian Materia Medica, pp. 45-49). {Styrax benzoin. or laserpiucium chiefly used for incense in the Greek church; benjuy is gum benjamin, i.e. luban-javi; the Olibanum of Java or benzoin, the balsamic resin of styrax benzoin; the asa-dulcis and laser cyrenaicum of the older pharmacists... benjuy is from India, near the ganges... is called amendoado in Siam... the Moors give them the name of louanjaoy, almost like the incense of Java... louan is their name for incense. The Deccanis and Guzeratis call it udo... we call the incense olibano, taking the word from the Greeks, and these also seem to have imitated the Greek word, corrupting it to louan..." (G. Da Orta, pp. 58-64). Frankincense: loban frankincense; luban incense, the resin of boswellia serrata (Santali.lex.) lo_ba_na olibanum, frankincense (Ka.M.H.)(Ka.lex.) "Frankincense. from the bark of different trees, particularly boswellia serrata. The Hebrew term is lebhonah, and the Arabic cognate is luban; the term frankincense means 'free (-burning) incense.' The gum is a product of South Arabia and was known to commerce as early at least as the seventeenth century BC; it was never cultivated in Palestine, and the word for the so-called dark frankincense from Lebanon is usually translated by the word 'myrrh.' The trade in frankincense was important; there was a deity whose significance was due to his function as a protector of the industry and the growth of the material; it is believed that the name Ethiopia comes from the word meaning 'collector of frankincense.' The gathering of the raw material was associated with pecular customs, the product being regarded as the blood of a tree the soul of which was a divinity. The best kind was that known as masculine frankincense (Pliny, Hist. Nat. xii.32). The substance became an article of luxury; wine was spiced with it, it figured in the presents to kings, and it was burnt at their burial. It was indispensable to heathen worship." (Samuel Macauley Jackson, (ed.), The

New Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, Grand Rapids, Michigan, Baker Book House, p. 372). To offer the first fruits: loban, luban to offer the first fruits; a mela held yearly at Bud.hai in the Santal Pargannas (Santali.lex.) "Frankincense was offered with the meat-offering, and first fruits, and burned with them on the altar. It was also placed on the shewbread as a 'memorial', azka_ra_h, in two golden vessels and then consumed on the altar at each weekly renewal of the bread (in Jewish rituals)" (James Hastings, Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics, New York, Charles Scribner's Sons, 1915, p.203). Great man: lobab a great man, a prince (Santali.lex.) cf. nobab (H.lex.) Boswellia serrata: s'allaki, sallaki the gum olibanum tree, boswellia thurifera; tadiki, taduku id.; gajapriya, gajabhaks.ai, suvahe, surabhi, rase, mahe_ran.e, kanduruki, hla_dini, a_nebe_la id.; tadukina dhu_pa, ya_vana, turus.ka, pin.d.aka, sihla; tadukina mad.d.i, ya_vana, turus.ka etc, anduka bonka, ha_lumad.d.i; cf. mad.d.iya dhu_pa incense varieties (Ka.lex.) s'allaki_ boswellia serrata (Car. Su. 4.32,5.23). Olibanum: silha (Tadbhava of sihla) olibanum (Ka.lex.) sihla, sihlaka benzoin, incense; sihlaki_, sihli_ the olibanum tree (Skt.lex.) s'ailakam benzoin; bitumen (Skt.lex.) salga boswellia serrata (Santali.lex.) s'allaki_ boswellia serrata (Skt.) Boswellia serrata: shallaki (Skt.); luban (H.B.); salai (H.B.); parangisambrani (Ta.Te.); gum: diuretic, astringent, used in rheumatism, nervous and skin diseases; two varieties are usually distinguished: serrata with serrate and pubescent leaves, and glabra with entire, glabrous leaves; habitat: Madhya Pradesh, Deccan, Bihar, Orissa, Rajputana, Madhya Bharat, Eastern States and N.Gujarat. Not found in Assam and Bengal (GIMP, p.39). Frankincense or olibanum: "A large proportion of the arboreal vegetation of the Siwa_liks (range of mountains running parallel to the Hima_laya near Dehra Dun) consists of species which occur both on the lower slopes of the Hima_laya and on the hilly districts of central and southern India, thus affording a good illustration of the width of distribution of Indian plants. As examples may be mentioned bombax malabaricum, buchannia latifolia, spondias mangifera, boswellia serrata, garuga pinnata, spatholobus roxburghee, albizzia stipulata, anogeiussus latifolia, ulmus integrifolia, and others." (E.T. Akinson (ed.), Flora of the Himalayas with special reference to Kumaon, Garhwal, Nepal and Tibet, New Delhi, Cosmo Publications, 1882, repr. 1989, p.300). 'Boswellia an important genus of incense-yielding trees (family burseraceae) of northern Africa and India having triangular 3-celled fruit with winged seeds ... a gum-resin obtained from certain species of trees of the genus boswellia, and natural order burseraceae. Sir George Birdwood distinguishes five species of boswellia: (a) boswellia thurifera (boswellia glabra and boswellia serrata), indigenous to the mountainous tracts of central India and the Coromandel coast, and boswellia papyrifera (plosslea floribunda) of Abyssinia, which though both thuriferous, are not known to yield any of the olibanum of commerce; and (b) boswellia frereana, boswellia bhua-dajiana and boswellia carterii, the 'yegaar', 'mohr add' and 'mohr madow' of the Somali country, in East Africa, the last species including a variety, the 'maghrayt d'sheehas' of Hadramaut, Arabia, all of which are sources of true frankincense or olibanum. To obtain the frankincense a deep incision is made in the trunk of the tree, and below it a narrow strip of bark 5 in in length is peeled off. When the milk-like juice ('spuma pinguis', Pliny) which exudes has hardened by exposure to the atmosphere, the incision is deepened. In about three months the resin has attained the required degree of consistency. The season for gathering lasts from May until the first rains in September. The large clear globules are scraped off into baskets... Much as formerly described by Arrian, in the region of Sakhalites in Arabia (the tract between RAs Makalla and Ras Agab), so now on the sea-coast of the Somali country, the frankincense when collected is stored in heaps at various stations. Thence, packed in sheep- and goat-skins, in quantities of 20 to 40 lb., it is carried on camels to Berbera, for shipment either to Aden, Makalla and other Arabian ports, or directly to Bombay. At Bombay, like gum-acacia, it is assorted, and is then packed for re-exportation to Europe, China and elsewhere. Olibanum is a reputed natural product of China.. Frankincense burns with a bright white flame, leaving an ash consisting mainly of calcium carbonate, the remainder being calcium phosphate, and the sulphate, chloride and carbonate of potassium. Good frankincense, Pliny tells us, is recognized by its whiteness, size, brittleness and ready inflammability. That which occurs in globular drops is, he says, termed 'male frankincense'' the most esteemed, he further remarks, is in breast-shaped drops, formed each by the union of two tears. The best frankincense, as we learn from Arrian, was formerly exported from the neighbourhood of Cape Elephant in Africa (the modern Ras Fiel); and A. von Kremeer, in his description of the commerce of the Red Sea (Aegypten etc., p.185, ii, Theil, Leipzig, 1863), observes that the African frankincense, called by the Arabs 'asli' is of twice the value of the Arabian 'luban.' Frankincense was used by the ancient Egyptians in their religious rites, but, as Herodotus tells us (ii.86), not in embalming. It constituted a fourth part of the Jewish incense of the sanctuary, and is frequently mentioned in the Pentateuch. With other species it was stored in a great chamber of the house of God at Jerusalem. As a medicine it was in former times in high repute. Pliny (Nat. Hist. xxv.82) mentions it as an antidote to hemlock... In the East frankincense has been found efficacious as an external application on carbuncles, blind boils and gangrenous sores, and as an internal agent is given in gonorrhoea... Common frankincense (thus or abietis resina), is the term applied to a resin which exudes from fissures in the bark of the Norway spruce fir, albies excelsa; when melted in hot water and strained it constitutes 'burgandy pitch,' pix abietina... Egypt where incense was prominent in religious ritual; e.g., at the daily liturgy before the cult image of Amon-Re and in the mortuary rites, when the souls of the dead were thought to ascend to heaven in the flame. Incense was employed to coutneract disagreeable odours and drive away demons and was said both to manifest the presence of the gods (fragrance being a divine attribute) and to gratify them. The Babylonians used it extensively while offering prayer or divining oracles. It was imported into Israel before the Exile and was assigned miraculous powers; later, in the 5th century BC, altars were set apart for incense offerings. The Hindus, especially the Shivaites, use incense for ritual and domestic offerings, and so do Buddhists, who burn it at festivals and initiations as well as at daily rites. In China incense was burned to ancestors and household gods, in festivals and processions, and in Japan it was incorporated into Shinto_ ritual. In Greece, from the 8th century BC, woods and resins were burned as an oblation and for protection against demons, a practice adopted by the Orphics. In Rome fragrant woods were replaced by imported incense, which became important in public and private sacrifices and in the cult of the emperor. In the 4th century AD, the early church began to use incense in eucharistic ceremonial, where it came to symbolize the ascent of the prayers of the faithful and the merits of the saints... Bdellium, is a gummy resinous concreted juice, brought from Arabia and the East Indies, in globes of different figures and magnitudes. It is of a dark reddish brown colour, and, in appearance, somewhat resembles myrrh; and is recommended as a sudorific, diuretic and uterine... Myrrh. a gum resin, highly esteemed by the ancients as an unguent and perfume, used for incense in temples and also in embalming; it was one of the gifts offered by the Magi. True myrrh is the product of commiphora myrrha, a small tree of the family burseraceae that grows in eastern Africa and Arabia... baisa bol, bhesa bol or bissa bol, from commiphora kataf, resembles true myrrh in appearance... opaque bdellium produced by commiphora play fairii, when shaken with water forms a slight but permanent lather. It is known as meena harma in Bombay and was formerly used there for the expulsion of the guinea worm. African bdellium is from commiphora africanum, and like opaque bdellium lacks the white streaks which are characteristic of myrrh and bissa bol... Indian bdellium, probably identical with Indian drug googul obtained in Sind and Baluchistan from commiphora mukul and commiphora pubescens, is of a dark reddish colour, has an acrid taste and an odour like cedar wood, and softens in the hand... As met in commerce... it consists of a mixture of resin, gum and essential oil, the resin being present to the extent of 25 to 40%, with 2 1/2 to 8% of the oil, myrrhol, to which the odour is due...' Synonyms: liquid storax, sweet gum; flussiger storax (Ger.); styrax liquide (Fr.); botanical origin: liquidambar orientalis, liquidambar styraciflua; part used: balsam obtained from the trunk; habitat: liquidambar orientalis is native to forests of southwestern Asia Minor; liquidambar styraciflua to the Americas; production: in the early part of the summer the trunk of the oriental sweet gum is bruised on one side. As a result of this injury storax forms in the young layers of wood and oozes into the wounded bark. In autumn, this bark, which is more or less saturated with balsam, is stripped off and the balsam pressed out. The bark is then boiled in wate within copper kettles and again pressed, and the remaining balsam thus extracted. The balsam is poured into barrels, goat skins or cans for shipment... Uses: storax is used as a stimulating expectorant in compound tincture of benzoin and other pharmaceutical preparations. It is also employed as a perfume in soaps and toilet preparations; preparation: compound benzoin tincture. (Heber W. Youngken, Textbook of Pharmacognosy, Philadelphia, The Blakiston Co., 1950, pp. 398-401). karppurai benzoin tree, styrax benzoin, ca_mpira_n.i (Can.. "Styrax benzoin: gum benjamin, benzoin laurel, benzoe (Ger.); benzoin (Fr.); part used: a balsamic resin. Sumatra benzoin yields not less than 75% of alcohol-soluble extractive. Siam Benzoin yields not less than 90% of alcohol-soluble extractive. Habitat: East Indies. The species of styrax yielding benzoin grow on hills and in plantations of Borneo, Java, Sumatra, Siam, North Annam and Tonkin... The balsamic resin slowly exudes as a white liquid... The first three years' product is more fragrant and contains more white tears. This is known to the natives as 'head benzoin'. The next 7 to 9 years' yield is somewhat brown and termed 'belly benzoin'. The trees are subsequently felled and the trunk split. The product that is scraped off... is known as 'foot benzoin'. Uses: Siam benzoin is used chiefly in the manufacture of toilet preparations and as a fixative in the manufacture of perfumes. Sumatra benzoin is employed internally as a stimulating expectorant and externally as a stimulant and antiseptic. Benzoin is also employed by the confectionery trade in the preparation of vanilla creams, etc. and by the leather trade as an ingredient of leather dressings." (Heber W. Anacardium orientale the oriental cashew-nut or marking-nut, represents the fruit of semecarpus anacardium, a tree with greenish-white flowers and black, drupaceous fruits indigenous to India... The fruits contain cardol, anacardic acid, the alkaloid chuchunine and tannin; the seeds, a fixed oil. The oil of the pericarp is used as a caustic or an escharotic, and sometimes in the treatment of certain indolent ulcers... the sap is a violent contact poison, and causes painful swelling and minute pustules on the skin. (Medicinal Plants of the Philippines, p. 542). Semecarpus anacardium: Indigenous to India... The fixed oil is used in India as an application to floors of houses, serving as a repellent to termites. The black juice of the fruit is used in printing cotton cloth. (Heber W. Youngken, Textbook of Pharmacognosy, Philadelphia, The Blakiston Co., 1950, p.537). Semecarpus anacardium: bhallika (Skt.); bhela (B.); biba (M.); bhilawa (H.P.); temprakku (Ma.); serangottai (Ta.); bhallatamu (Te.); nut: bruised and applied to os uteri to procure abortion; given as a vermifuge; oil from the nuts: vesicant, used externally in rheumatism and leprous nodules; gum from bark: used in scrofulous, venereal and leprous affections and nervous debility; ashes of the plant: in combination with other drugs used in snake-bite and scorpion-sting; habitat: sub-Himalayan tract from the Beas eastwards and deciduous forests of all districts (GIMP, p. 225). "bhalla_taka (Skt.); arus.kara (Skt.); bhela_ (B.H.); the acrid juice of marking nuts is a powerful vesicant and is often employed by the natives for producing fictitious marks of bruises. These can be distinguished from actual bruises caused by blows with a stick or other weapon, by their deep bluish-black colour and from their presenting small vesicles or minute blisters on their surface. The practice of causing blisters by the application of the juice of marking nuts among the Hindus appears to have been at one time very common, for in our ancient medical works a section or paragraph is generally devoted to the treatment of ulcerations thus produced. The ripe fruits are regarded as acrid, heating, stimulant, digestive, nervine and escharotic, and are used in dyuspepsia, piles, skin diseases, nervous debility, etc... Equal parts of marking nuts, chebulic myrobalans and sesamum seeds, are made into a confection with treacle and administered in doses of forty or sixty grains... Another confection of marking nuts, made with the addition of a number of aromatic substances, is recommended for use in skin diseases and leprosy. Marking nuts enter into the composition of some caustic applications for warts and piles. They form an ingredient of liniment for rheumatic affections called saindhava_dya taila..." It is said that a kind of attar is prepared from the flowers in southern India (Medicinal Plants of the Philippines, p.907). ?Nyctanthes sambac = jasminum sambac: Sampagita (Philippines)... is a spreading or sprawling shrub usually less than 2 meters in height... Filipias often conceal the blossoms in their hair on account of their fragrance... Burkill reports that in China the flowers are used for giving an aroma to tea. In Malaya women soak the flowers in water to be used for washing the face... the flowers yield an essential oil similar to that of jasmine (Medicinal Plants of the Philippines, p.708).
