Their usual epithet and category of being is amanussa, i.e., not a human being (but not a sublime god either); a being half deified and of great power as regards influencing people (partly helping, partly hurting)... Historically they are remnants of an ancient demonology and of considerable folkloristic interest, as in them old animistic beliefs are incorporated and as they represent creatures of the wilds and forests... they are sometimes called devata_ or devaputta_... their usual capacity is one of kindness to men... whole cities stand under the protection of, or are inhabited by yakkhas... Lanka_ (Ceylon)... inhabited by yakkhas... in a progressive order they rank between manussa and gandhabba; they are mentioned with devas, rakkhasas, da_navas, gandhabbas, kinnaras and mahoragas... the four great kings (lokapa_la_), the followers of Vessavan.a (alias Yama, the yakkhas proper) and men (yakkha = satta, nara, puggala, manussa) go by the name of yakkha... Sakka, the king of the devas, is often named yakkha... Some are spirits of trees (rukkha-devata_)... their cult seems to originate primarily from the woods, and secondarily from the legends of sea-faring merchants. To the later origin point the original descriptions of a vima_na or fairy-place, which is due to a sort of mirage. These are usually found in or at the sea, or in the neighbourhood of silent lakes, where the sense of hauntedness has given rise to the fear of demons or supernatural witchcraft... the entrances to a vima_na by means of a dried-up river bed... some of their names are: a_l.avaka forest-dweller, uppala lotus, kakudha kakudha tree, terminalia arjuna; kumbhi_ra crocodile, vajira thunderbolt, sa_ta_gira pleasant-mount, seri_saka acacia-dweller... In harmony with tradition they share the role of their master kube_ra as lord of riches and are the keepers (and liberal spenders) of underground riches, hidden treasures etc., with which they delight men... they can transfer themselves to any place with their palaces and work miracles... they are shy and afraid of palmyra leaf and iron; their eyes are red and do not wink. Their abode is their self-created palace (vima_na), which is anywhere in the air, or in trees etc... yakkha-nagara city of yakkhas (= siri_savatthu)... yakkha-mahiddhi, yakkhiddhi magic power of a yakkha... yakkha-su_kara a yakkha in the form of a pig... yakkha-sena_pati chief-commander of the yakkha-army (Pali.lex.) "In the early records, yakkha as an appellation is, like na_ga, anything but depreciative. Not only is Sakka so called, but the Buddha himself is so referred to in poetic diction. We have seen kakudha, son of the gods, so addressed; and the city of the gods, Alakamanda_, is described as crowed with yakkhas (gods). They have a deva's supernormal powers..." (Mrs. Rhys Davids, Book of the Kindred Sayings, I, 1917, p.262). "Kubera or Kuvera (Vais'ravan.a, vais'raman.a, also in Buddhist literature Vessavan.a, Pa_cika, Jambhala etc.) is one of the four Great Kings... and the chief of all Yaks.as... worshipped especially for treasure... His city A_l.aka situated on Mt. Kaila_sa (also the abode of S'iva) is a magnificent walled town, where dwell not only Yaks.as, but also Kim.naras, Munis, Gandharvas and Ra_ks.asas. Very possibly, as M. Goloubew (Ars Asiatica, X) has suggested, the whole of the ceiling of Cave I at Ajan.t.a_ may be regarded as a representation of the Paradise of Kuvera... Kubera has many beautiful palaces, groves, gardens etc. on Mt. Kaila_sa... Gan.es'a (lord of hosts) is undoubtely a Yaks.a type... perhaps actually equivalent to Kubera or Man.ibhadra... Kuber himself can be regarded as the first smelter of gold (Hopkins, Epic Mythology, p.146)... (on Buddhist railings)... the Kim.naras and Kim.purus.as, and Gandharvas too, (are represented) typically half-human, half-equine... the haunt or abode (bhavanam) of a Yaks.a, often referred to as a caitya (Pali, cetiya, Prakrit, ce_iya) or a_yatana (Prakrit a_yayan.a) may be outside a city, in a grove, on a mountain or at a gha_t... or by a tank... or at the gates of a city... or even within the palace precincts... the essential element of a Yaks.a holystead is a stone table or altar (veyad.d.i, maco) placed beneath the tree sacred to the Yaks.a... it is quite certain that the word caitya sometimes means no more than a sacred tree, or a tree with an altar... caitya-vr.ks.as in the Epics... the grove of sa_l-trees belonging to the Mallas, where the Parinibba_n.a took place... The incense made from deodar and vatica robusta is liked by all deities; but sallaki_ya incense is disliked by the gods and suitable only for the Daityas... The prospector, before digging for treasure in Northern India, makes offerings of meat, seasmum seeds, and flowers, to Kuvera, Ma_n.ibhadra etc. (MBh. 14,65,11)... there is no motif more fundamentally characteristic of Indian art from first to last than is that of the Woman and Tree... sa_l-tree, mango, plaks.a and as'oka-tree... vr.ksaka_ dryad... s'a_labhajika_, 'she who plucks s'a_la flowers'... the maidens of Avanti_ worship Manobhava (= Mayan.a, Ka_madea), laying their offerings of perfumes, flowers, turmeric, and chinese silk... in the cool shade of a mango tree... Varun.a himself is a patron of physicians... Kubera's nine treasures are the padma, maha_padma, s'an:kha, makara, kacchapa, mukunda, nanda, ni_la, kharva, and nearly all of these are water-symbols... it is the whole lotus plant that is generally represented in art... lotus rises from a pun.n.a ghat.a... banyan nyagrodha... makara with the ornamented lotus rhizome proceeding from its mouth... jalebha (water-elephant) and lotus... s'an:kha and lotus... " (Ananda Coomaraswamy, Yaks.as, 1980, 2nd edn., Part I, pp.6-43; Part II, pp.11-84).{The terms a_l.avaka, uppala, kakudha, Clerodendron inerme = clerodendron capsulate = clerodendron commersonii = clerodendron neriifolium: ... a shrub 1 to 4 meters high. The leaves are ovate and pointed at the tip... found along the seashore and beside tidal streams... occurs in India to Formosa, and through Malaya to tropical Australia and Polynesia... According to Nadkarni the leaves are mucilaginous and fragrant. They are found to contain, in addition to a bitter principle, a fragrant stearoptin to which their applelike odour is due; resin; gum; brown colouring matter... the decocted root is administered in the Philippines as a febrifuge and general alterative... the root, boiled in oil, is applied like liniment for rheumatism... also used as a substitute for quinine in intermittent fevers... A bath of the leaves is recommended for mania and for itches. Dymock adds that the juice of the leaves is administered as a febrifuge. Burkill quotes Rumpf, who states that, in his time, the sailors of Macassar always took the fruit and roots to sea with them. The seeds were considered the more useful of the two. When the stomach has been upset by eating poisonous fish, crabs etc., a decoction was taken, or just the pounded seeds. Rumpf says further that the leaves, if eaten with rice, increase the appetite. Miquel tells of the fruit's being sent from Celebes to Java as a medicine for dysentery (Medicinal Plants of the Philippines, pp. 787-789).

3056.Terminalia chebula: s'a_ka_ terminalia chebula, s'an:ku a particular tree (Skt.)(CDIAL 12369). cf. jun:gi terminalia chebula (Santali.lex.) Synonyms: hari_taki_, abhaya_, pathya_ terminalia chebula (Skt.); haritaki (B.); har (H.): "the chublic myrobalan was highly extolled by the ancient Hindus as a powerful alterative and tonic. cf. synonyms: pra_nada_, or life-giver, sudha_ or nectar, bhishakapriya or physician's favourite etc.. So highly esteemed was this plant by the ancient Hindus, that a mythological origin has been attributed to it. It is said that when Indra was drinking nectar in heaven, a drop of the fluid fell on the earth and produced the haritaki plant. Seven varieties of haritaki are described by Sanskrit writers, the distinctions being founded upon the shape, colour and marks on the outer covering of the fruits. At the present day, however, two varieties only are recognised, namely, the large ripe fruit called haritaki, and the unripe dried fruit called jangi haritaki in vernacular... only the coats of the fruits are used in medicine... chebulic myrobalans are described as laxative, stomachic, tonic and alternative. They are used in fevers, cough, asthma, urinary diseases, piles, intestinal worms, chronic diarrhoea, costiveness, flatulence, vomiting, hiccup, heart diseases, enlarged spleen and liver, ascites, skin diseases etc. In combination with emblic and belleric myrobalans, and under the name of triphala_ or the three myrobalans, they are extensively used as adjuncts to other medicines in almost all diseases..." (U.C. Dutt, Materia Medica of the Hindus, 1922, pp.161-164; pp.226-227). Prospero Albini mentions the use of myrobalanos (dried fruit from India) macerated into water melon pulp... used by Egyptian women to gain weight... Together with fennel (foeniculum vulgare), yellow myrobalanos (dried fruits) were used in ancient Egyptian medicine (Lise Manniche, An Ancient Egyptian Herbal, pp. 105-106).

Moringa pterygosperma is indigenous to Egypt and still grows there. The oil (ben oil) is odourless, yellowish and with a sweet taste. It is favoured in cosmetics, as it does not easily go rancid, and it is also used for cooking.' (Lise Manniche, An Ancient Egyptian Herbal, British Museum Publications Ltd., pp.122-123). s'igru(ka) moringa pterygosperma (Car. Su. 2.3, 4.27). Moringa oliefera = moringa pterygosperma: ... The roots are used for seasoning, like those of horse-radish. O'Shaughnessy says that in Jamaica, the wood is used for dyeing blue colour... The root yields an essential oil which is very pungent and offensive in odour... the seed contains traces of an acrid and pungent alkaloid, Ben, or Behen, oil... consists largely of the glycerides of oleic, palmitic, and stearic acids... Wehmer adds that the gum contains bassorin... Dalziel states that the bark exudes a reddish gum with the properties of tragacanth, which serves for tanning. The seeds are official in the French Pharmacopoeia, and the seed oil in the French and Danish Pharmacopoeias... The gum, mixed with sesamum oil, is recommended to be poured into the ears for the relief of otalgia... The flowers are used in India for catarrh... The ben oil from seeds is said to be used for salads and culinary purposes, and is a good illuminant. According to the bulletin of the Imperial Institute, the oil is particularly valuable for ointments since it can be kept for almost any length of time without undergoing oxidation. This property, together with the absence of colour, smell and taste, renders it peculiarly adapted for use in the 'enfleurage' process of extracting perfumes. Dey, Nadkarni and Sanyal and Ghose say that the oil is used as an external application for rheumatism. Nadkarni states that the essential oil from the root is used externally as a rubefacient. Lac is a resinous secretion that encrusts the bodies of tachardia lacca (lakshadia indica) or other species of tachardia; habitat: India, Burma and Assam; animals: small scale insects of orange red colour, about 0.5 mm. in length occurring in dense colonies forming a crust on the twigs and branches of various trees which they puncture with their proboscis and suck the juices. The lac insect occurs chiefly on trees of ficus religiosa and ficus indica, schleichera trijuga, aleurites laccifera, acacia arabisa and butea frondosa which are cultivated in various parts of India as host plants for the propagation of the insect... To insure large production, the natives break off twigs covered with female insects and tie them on to uninfested trees. Th eyoung branches and twigs which are covered by a crust composed of the bodies of the insects are broken off after the resin has been secreted and constitute stick lac... (which is) partially deprived of its colouring matter by maceration in water or dilute soda solution and the coloured solution strained and evaporated to dryness, forming a product called lac dye... Shellac is prepared from either the scrapings of stick lac or from lac... by melting it with a small amount of added orpiment and resin, straining it through cloths and pouring it upon smooth flat plates... Most of the lac is produced in western Bengal and other provinces of India... Uses: in varnishes, as the principal ingredient in sealing wax, in polishes, electrical apparatus etc. (Heber W. Youngken, Textbook of Pharmacognosy, Philadelphia, The Blakiston Co., 1950, pp. 916-917).

3308.An invocation: siddham lit. success has been attained; an invocation found in early inscriptions at the commencement of the text; sometimes confused with pran.ava; generally indicated in later records by a symbol having several varieties; sometimes indicated by the letter cha (EI 30; CII 3); Alphabet: siddha ma_tr.ka_ name of the Indian alphabet derived from late bra_hmi_ and from which are derived north Indian alphabets like na_gari_, wrongly called kut.ila etc. (IEG, p.310). siddhi (CII 4) emancipation; sometimes used at the beginning of documents to ensure the success of the undertaking (IEG). "At the beginning of an inscription generally and also at its end occasionally, there is an auspicious symbol or word or passage in adoration to a deity. The word siddham and svasti at the beginning of inscriptions are commonly found, though siddham gradually came to be represented by a symbol found at the beginning of numerous inscriptions. Among other auspicious symbols, occasionally we have the svastika (Archaeological Survey of South India, Vol. I, Plate 69; Archaeological Survey of Western India, Vol. IV, Plate 49, Nos. 5-7, 9, 11, 13-14), the trident-on-wheel called triratna [ASWI, Vol. IV, Plate 49, Nos. 8, 10, 15; sometimes called nandipada (Rapson's catalogue, p. clxxv), British Museum Catalogue of the Coins of the Andhras, London, 1908], the s'ri_vatsa [together with the svastika symbol at the beginning of the Hathigumpha inscription of Kha_ravela (Select Inscriptions, Plate facing p. 208)], the tree-in-railing (at the end of the Hathigumpha inscription, ibid., Plate facing p. 209), and certain unidentified symbols (ASWI, Vol. IV, Plate 44-- Bhaja No. 7; Plate 45-- Kuda Nos. I,6,16; Plate 46-- Kuda Nos. 20, 22, 24, 26) in early inscriptions (cf. Epigraphica Indica, Vol. XXXIII, p. 247 and Plate facing p. 251)... A man:gala, i.e. a benediction or an auspicious word, at the beginning, in the middle and at the end of a composition was believed to ensure its completion and preservation. The auspicious word siddham is found at the beginning of numerous early records (cf. Select Inscriptions, pp. 157, 160, 164, 165, 169, 176, 191, 193, 196, 200, 203, 204, 205; for the contractions sdha and sdhi cf. ibid., pp. 150, 156). This word was in later times generally indicated by a symbol of a varying shape. The symbols was sometimes followed by the auspicious word svasti which, in some cases, stands singly at the beginning of epigraphic records (ibid., p. 331, text line 1; p. 403, text line 1; Epigraphic Indica, Vol. XXVIII, Plate facing p. 62, text line 1). Sometimes the man:gala : siddhir-astu, having the same import as siddham, as also a bigger man:gala sentence beginning with svasty-astu, is found at the end of the documents (cf. Select Inscriptions, p. 298, text line 24; p. 385, text line 41; p. 409, text line 30; p. 327, text line 9; p. 397, text line 8; p. 441, text line 55; p. 455, text line 15). In some cases again a symbol, which is apparently a variant of the siddham sign, appears at the end of a document and, in rare cases, also in the body of its text especially at the end of a section of it (cf. Epigraphica Indica, Vol. III, p. 129, Plate, text lin3 24; Select Inscriptions, p. 457). Besides the siddham symbol, various other auspicious symbols also appear in inscriptions. Al-Biru_ni_ regarded the auspicious symbol at the beginning of inscriptions as indicating the pran.ava or the sound om. (Sachau, Alberuni's India, Part I, p. 173). N. K. Bhattasali challenged the authority of Al-Biru_ni_ and suggested that the symbol indicates siddham or siddhir-astu (Epigraphic Indica, Vol. XVII, p. 352). There is no doubt that the symbol stood for the word siddham found at the beginning of numerous early inscriptions. But there is evidence to show that sometimes the symbol was pronounced as om. siddhih- [Certain medieval charms, composed in the form of royal charters, have the om. siddhih- at the beginning, which is apparently the pronounced form of the symbol at the commencement of numerous inscriptions, including copper-plate grants; cf. Proceedings IHC, 1939, pp. 471) and Al-Biru_ni_ seems to have confused this om. siddhih- with om. Instances of such confusion are also noticed in Indian epigraphs like the Baud plates (IHQ, Vol. X, p. 475) of Ran.abhaja which begin with the symbol followed by the word siddhih- and the Belabo plate (Majumdar, Ins. Beng., Vol. III, p. 19) of Bhojavarman, which has the symbol followed by om. siddhih- at the beginning. The symbol was generally used till recent times in the eastern areas with the sign of nasalisation placed above the Bengali figure for 7 or as the figure 4 as found in medieval inscriptions from Bengal (cf. Proc. IHC, 1939, p. 471; IHQ, Vol. XXXIII, p. 103 and Plate facing p. 102; P. N. Bhattacharya, Ka_maru_pas'a_sana_vali_, p. 55). The sign is called pil.l.aiya_r cur..i (Gan.es'a's curl) in Tamil (Ep. Ind., Vol. XVII, p. 352, note). The svastika (of both the va_m-a_varta and daks.in.-va_rta types) and taurine symbols are found in As'oka's separate edicts at Jaugad.a (Corp. Ins. Ind., Vol. I, Plate facing p. 116). The triskele symbol, which is a modification of the svastika, is found at the beginning of the Er-r-agud.i and Ra_jula-Man.d.agiri M.R. Edicts of As'oka. (Ep. Ind., Vol. XXXI, Plates facing pp. 221, 216; Vol. XXXII, Plate facing p. 6). The svastika is also found at the beginning and the end of many other records generally belonging to dates earlier than the 3rd century A.D. (ibid. Vol. VII, Plate III (No.6) facing p. 76; Plate VII (No.16) facing p. 88). While occurring at the beginning of a document, it is sometimes placed before, and rarely after, the word siddham (sidha, sidham., etc. in Prakrit and sometimes in contractions like dha or sdhi)(ibid., Plate III (No. 6) facing p. 76, and Plate IV (no. 10) facing p. 78). At the beginning of the Ha_thigumpha_ inscription, the svastika appears beneath a crown-like symbol called s'ri_vatsa, while the inscription ends with the 'tree-within-railing' symbol (Select Inscriptions, Plate facing pp. 208 and 209). Other symbols found in some cases are the trident or triratna resting on the dharma-cakra and the lotus (Epigraphic Indica, Vol. XVIII, Plates facing pp. 96, 150, 151; Vol. XIX, p. 81, text line 41; Plate facing p. 60, text lines 6, 16, 20; Vol. XXX, p. 219, text line 11; Vol. XXXI, p. 128, text lines 205 and 212; Cor. Ins. Ind., Vol. III, No. 62). In early medieval epigraphs and manuscripts, a circle, with a smaller circle or dot (or dots) inside, sometimes indicates fullstop. As the circle with a central dot is the old Bra_hmi_ letter tha, modified forms of the same letter came to be used in later times. (ibid., Vol. XVIII, p.298, text line 30; Vol. XIX p. 81, text line 41; Plate facing p. 331, text line 21; Vol. XXX, p. 125, text line 17; VOl. XXXI, p. 166, text line 20 (not s'ri_). The same symbol is found in some old Jain manuscripts as a circle with a globular mark at the centre and drawn under a horizontal line, Journ. Or. Inst., Baroda, Vol. III, No. 4, Jun3 1954, P. 368). In some medieval records, the symbol stands midway between tha and cha (Ep. Ind., Vol. XVIII, p. 80), and this confusion led to the growth of the popular use of the letter cha as the concluding mark at the end of literary or epigraphic records and sections thereof (ibid., Vol. XXIII, pp. 140-141, text lines 4 and 15; Vol. XXV, p. 63, text line 94, p. 221 text line 141. It is really not a variety of the siddham symbol). Cha is recognised in this capacity in early medieval works like S'ri_hars.a's Nais.adhi_ya and Hemachandra's Eka_ks.arakos.a. Sometimes the auspicious word s'ri_ also appears in the same way at the end of documents (Ep. Ind., Vol. XXXI, p. 16 text line 26. Medieval south and west Indian records often end with man:galam. maha_-s'ri_h- sometimes preceded by m. bhavatu. They begin with svasti jayas'-c-a_bhyudayas'-ca). In the inscriptions of the Gupta age, the auspicious word siddham at the beginning of epigraphs was sometimes represented by a crescent-like curved stroke opening towards the left (Corp. Ins. Ind., Vol. III, Nos. 11 Plate VIA, 20 Plate XIIB). This mark resembles the symbol or mark of interpunctuation at the end of many of As'oka's edicts at Kalsi_. It has been pointed out that some scholars regard it as standing for the pran.ava, i.e. the auspicious symbol om, even though the sign occurs in typical Buddhist epigraphs and the Buddhists did not attach any importance to the pran.ava (ibid., p. 46, note 3). We have seen above that, though this view is supported by Al-Biru_ni_, there is some evidence to show that the symbol was read as siddham or siddhr-astu (Ep. Ind., Vol. XVII, p. 352; Proc. IHC, 1939, pp. 471 ff.) Ths suggestion seems to be suported by the fact that some medieval inscriptions begin with the symbol followed by a namaska_ra passage like om. namah-, om.namah- s'iva_ya, om. namo na_ra_yan.a_ya, om. namah- s'ri_-vis'ves'vara_ya etc. (Majumdar, Ins. Beng., VOl. III, pp. 46, 61, 71, 85, 94, 101, 109, 121, 133, 143; Ind. Ant., VOl. XI, p. 242; Ep. Ind., Vol. II, p. 305; Vol.

XXXIV, p. 81), and also by the man:gala: om.svasti (Ep. Ind., VOl. XXIX, Plate facing p. 102, text line 1). We have explained the confusion of the symbol with the pran.ava by the fact that sometimes it was read as om. siddhih- (in rare cases the symbol is followed by the word siddhih- or om. siddhih- as we have already noticed). The symbol was gradually modifed to the shape of a stroke slanting towards lower right with its top curved or looped inwards to the right (Ep. Ind., Vol. XXVII, Plate facing p. 328 text line 1; Vol. XXVIII, Plate facing p. 50 text line 1; Plate facing p. 112) or slanting towards lower left with its top curved or looped inwards to the left (ibid., Vol. XXVIII, Plate facing p. 66 text line 1; Plate facing p. 84 text line 1). Sometimes the lower end of the stroke exhibits an ornamental downward flourish or upward bend (ibid., VOl. XXXI, Plate facing p. 72; Vol. XXVII, Plate facing 0. 50; Vol. XXIX, Plate facing p. 88; VOl. XXXI, Plate facing p. 266). Both the va_m-a_varta and daks.in.-a_varta types were used in some cases in records of the same locality and also of the same age (Valgudar, Monghyr District, Bihar inscriptions illustrated in Ep. Ind., Vol. XXVIII, Plate facing p. 145). In the medieval inscriptions of Eastern India, the symbol resembles the Bengali numeral figure 7 (a vertical stroke with its top curved towards the left and ending in an inward bend)(ibid., VOl. XXX, Plates facing pp. 186, 236) and it was used in the central parts of Bengal with the addition of a sign called candra-bindu or a_nuna_sika above. But in the eastern-most areas of Bengal, the same symbol was written with the lower end curved considerably towards the right and was called a_ji_ (IHQ, Vol. XXXIII, p. 103), and the Bengali alphabet with the symbol at the head was called a_ji_-ka-kha (P.N. Bhattacharya, Ka_maru_pas'a_sana_vali_, p. 55). In western India, however, the symbol appearing in medieval inscriptions looks like a numerical figure (Ep. Ind., Vol. XXXI, Plate facing p. 72) and often a globular mark looking like a cypher is placed after it (ibid., Vol. III Plate (middle) facing p. 306; Vol. XXXI, Plate facing p. 14 text line 1; Vol. XXX Plate facing p. 191). In south Indian records of the early and medieval periods, the symbol is often a va_m-a_varta spiral (ibid., Vol. XXXI, Plate facing p. 233), some-times resembling the representation of a conch-shell, which is called pil.l.aiya_r-cur..i or Gan.es'a's curl and is first taught to the children before they begin to learn the alphabet (ibid., Vol. XVII, p. 352, note). Certain Nepal inscriptions exhibit auspicious symbols representing the conch-shell, the lotus, the bull, the fish, the sun-wheel and the stars. (Ind. Ant., Vol. IX, pp. 163 ff. For the conch-shell in other records, cf. Ep. Ind., Vol. XXV, Plate facing p. 236; and for the lotus, cf. JAS, Letters, Vol. XVIII, 1952, pp. 77ff., Plate II). In the medieval epigraphs of the Andhra region, the lotus symbol is sometimes found about the beginning (P. Sreenivasachar, A Corpus of Inscriptions, Part II, Plates 37,41). The kailvan (Patna District, Bihar) inscription (Ep. Ind., Vol. XXXI, Plate facing p. 231) of about the second century A.D. exhibits four symbols between the beginning and end of a circular line of writing. These are a long-necked pitcher, a double svastika (one of the va_m-a_varta and the other of the daks.in.-a_varta type) and another looking like a sacrificial altar. At the end of the Guakuchi copper plate grant (P.N. Bhattacharya, Ka_maru_pas'a_sana_vali_, Plate facing p. 140) of king Ratnapa_la of Assam, there are representations of a bird (Garud.a) carrying a snake, the lotus, the conch-shell and the discus, all connected with the god Vis.n.u... The antiquity of the use of this word (siddham let there be success) is proved by Patajali's Maha_bha_s.ya on the first va_rttika (siddhe s'abd-a_rtha-sambandhe) of Ka_tya_yana on Pa_n.ini's As.t.a_dhya_yi_. Patajali says that Ka_tya_yana employs the word siddha at the very outset for the auspicious completion of his scientific treatise... Gradually the invocation became more and more elaborate, and it ran from mere symbols and words to more or less big sections in prose and verse in praise of the favourite deities of the grantors or the writers of the document. Thus the charters of the early western Gan:gas begin with with the symbol denoting siddham, followed by a passage hailing the god Vis.n.u in the words : jitam. bhagavata_ gata-ghana-gagan-a_bhena padmana_bhena..." (D.C.Sircar, Indian Epigraphy, Delhi, Motilal Banarsidass, 1965, p.5, pp. 92-97, pp. 127-128). The use of the word a_ji_ for the symbol siddham may be related to the designation often used in south Indian records: a_ja_, a_japti or a_ja_pti (lit. 'the order') to designate the high officer (sometimes a prince) who conveyed the royal order. He is generally called du_ta or du_taka (lit. the messenger) in north Indian records. Term such a_ja_ svayam 'the order is (from) the donor himself'; sva-mukh-a_ja_ 'the order is (from) the (donor's) own mouth'... indicate that the a_japti was the 'executor (of a grant)'. The alphabet called raja_ or rajana_ was used in Tibet which was a derivative of the siddhama_tr.ka_ (cf. early licchavi epigraphs like the changunarayan pillar inscription (464 A.D.) of Ma_nadeva) and Buddhist manuscripts of Buddhist Dha_ran.i_s written in China and Japan; cf. the Tibetan alphabet which is a modified form of siddhama_tr.ka_). The Sanskrit inscription of Ceylon from the Jetavanara_ma is written in the siddhama_tr.ka_ alphabet of northern India and assigned on paleographical grounds to the 9th century A.D. (Ep. Zeyl., Vol. III, pp. 195 ff.) The inscription of A_nandacandra of Burma is written in the siddhama_tr.ka_ alphabet of eastern India (Ep. Ind., Vol. XXXII, pp. 103 ff.; Sel. Ins., pp. 462 ff.) (D.C. Sircar, Indian Epigraphy, pp. 207-212). There is a maxim : bhu_mi-cchidra-nya_ya according to which the gift (of land) shall endure as long a time as the moon, the sun and the earth shall endure (a_-candr-a_rka- ks.iti-samaka_lam) (Ep. Ind., Vol. XXIX, p. 5, note). The maxim is referred to "in a large number of records. It speaks of the old custom, according to which a person who brings a piece of fallow or jungle land under cultivation for the first time was allowed to enjoy it without paying rent. The custom was based on the principle that the hunted deer belonged to him who hit it first. (cf. Jolly, Hindu Law and Custom, pp. 196-197). The word chidra in this case seems to have originally referred to the furrowing of the land. Gradually however the expression bhu_mi-cchidra acquired the meaning of 'uncultivable (kr.s.y-ayogya_) land', and that is why some early medieval inscriptions from Orissa, e.g. the charters of the Bhauma-Karas, speak of the same maxim as bhu_mi-cchidra-pidha_na-nya_ya literally 'the maxim of covering up the hole in the land', probably referring to the reclamation of fallow land for the first time. (Ep. Ind., Vol. XXIX, p.86)." (D.C. Sircar, Indian Epigraphy, p. 397). "An inscribed fragment of a pillar was discovered in the village of Barli in Rajasthan by the late Pt. G.H. Ojha in 1912 (Ojha : Pra_ci_nalipima_la_ (Hindi), p. 2)... the first letter (form: O with a right loop on top) was read as vi_... Dr. K. P. Jayaswal... denied this mark as a sign for long medial i_... dated it to 374-373 B.C. (JBORS, 1930, p. 67-68)... Dr.D.C. Sircar... restores as siddham.. He places the record in the 1st century B.C." (C.S. Upasak, The history and palaeography of Mauryan Bra_mi_ Script, Nalanda, 1960, pp. 185-186).

Chenopodium ambrosioides (var. anthelminticum): official in many pharmacopoeias. Burkill states that the characteristic smell of the plant, as well as its action, is due to ascaridol, contained in the volatile oil extracted from the plant. He reports further that the oil is chiefly distilled from the fruit, being stored in the hairs on its surface. Burkill reports that the fruit is well known for its vermifuge properties... Father Clain... in 1857, the juice of this plant given as anthelmintic. Guerrero says that the leaves and tops, crushed and mixed with cooked rice, are used as a carminative in poultices and applied to the abdomen of children suffering from dyspepsia. This plant is considered also to be an emmenagogue... Watt and Breyer-Brandwijk, writing of its uses in southern Africa, say that the Sutos and Zulus use the infusion for colds and stomachache; as an enema for intestinal ulceration, and as sudorific. Martinez mentions its use in Mexico as an emmenagogue and vermifuge. An infusion is administered as a diuretic and sudorific. Kirtikar and Basu... employed in pectoral complaints and in nervous affections. Daruty adds that it is also used as an abortifacient. This oil is employed in Martinique as a stomachic, according to Eberhardt. (Medicinal Plants of the Philippines, pp.261-263). Chenopodium album: vastuk (Skt.); chandan betu, bethu sag (B.); chakwit (M.); bathu (P.); bethu sag (H.); parupukkirai (Ta.); pappukura (Te.); plant: laxative, anthelmintic; habitat: occurring chiefly in cultivated ground (GIMP, p.61). Chenopodium botrys: Strongly aormatic; habitat: from Kashmir to Sikkim; Punjab; Europe, N. and W. Asia, N. Africa; in France and southern Europe, it is used in catarrh and humoral asthma; a good substitute for chenopodium ambrosioides; Catalan: botris, xinxera; English: Jerusalem oak; French: chenopode a grappes, piment; Spanish: biengranada... Chenopodium ambrosioides: Habitat: Bengal, Sylhet, Deccan, S. India; the plant was used medicinally by the American Indians in the days of Columbus, and in South America infusions made from the leaves and seeds have been a household remedy against intestinal parasites from time immemorial. The plant is used in Europe in pectoral complaints, and in nervous affections, particularly cholera... The Zulus use an infusion as an enema for intestinal ulceration... Oil of chenopodium acts as a powerful vermicide both on ankylostomes and necators... Canarese: guddavoma, kadavoma; Malayalam: kasu ayamodakam (Kartikar and Basu, Indian Medicinal Plants, pp. 2071-2076).

Hingtsha repens = enhydra heloncha: hilamo_cika_ (Skt.); hincha_ (B.); harhuch (H.) The leaves of this water plant are eaten by the natives as a vegetable. Being somewhat bitter they are regarded as wholesome and invigorating. Medicinally they are described as laxative and useful in diseases of the skin and nervous system. The fresh juice of the leaves, in doses of about a tola_ is prescribed by some Kavirajas in Calcutta, as an adjunct to tonic metallic medicines given in neuralgia and other nervous diseases (Sanskrit Materia Medica, p.186). Enhydra fluctuans: hilamochi (Skt.); harkuch (H.); hingcha (B.); leaves: laxative, useful in skin and nervous affections, antibilious, demulcent; dry plant yields an essential oil; habitat: Bengal, Asssam and Bihar (GIMP, p.107). Enhydra fluctuans: According to Burkill the young parts are used as a salad in several countries, including Malaya. Sometimes they are steamed before they are eaten... somewhat bitter and are used by the Malays as a laxative. Caius says that the leaves are useful in disease of the skin and of the nervous system... The leaves are antibilious. The expressed juice of the leaves is used as a demulcent in cases of gonorrhoea; it is taken mixed with the milk of either a cow or a goat. As a cooling agent, the leaves are pounded and made into a paste which is applied cold to the head. Watt quotes Forsyth, who states that the plant is useful in torpidity of the liver. An infusion should be made the previous evening. It is boiled with rice and taken with mustard oil and salt. (Medicinal Plants of the Philippines, pp.980-981).

(Pe.); eji ki- id. (Mand..); eji ki_nai id. (Kuwi)(DEDR 793). {It is significant that 'enumeration' is distinct from 'division'. Ancient numeral systems have included multiple sets of vocables. One set, for e.g., to count upto four; from then on, count in 'fours' until five 'fours' or a super-set 'twenty' is reached, as a terminal point in counting. Another set is used for 'division' arithmetic. Eighty connoting the whole can be divided in a binary sequence of measures, e.g. ma_ (1/20, i.e. the whole is divided into four 'parts'); ka_n.i (1/80, i.e. each ma_ is further divided into four 'parts'); cf. cmpd. ma_ka_n.i (= ma_ + ka_n.i, i.e. 1/16). It is notable that there is a morpheme for the fraction 1/320 when the 'whole' is to be broken down to its miniscule part, again dividing in 'fours', (i.e. 320 becomes 80; 80 becomes 20): muntiri (muntiri me_r- ka_n.i mikuvate_l: Na_lat.i, 346)(Ta.); id. (Ma.)(DEDR 4964). A later evolution into the decimal system is apparent from the multiple uses of the morpheme: vi_s'-: e.g., vi_cam (Ta.) is a unit of 'division', a fraction 1/16 or ma_ka_n.i. It takes 20 vi_cam's to arrive at a set of four 'eighties'. This arithmetic leads to the use of the phoneme, vi_s'- to connote '20'. The usage of this morpheme, vi_s'- relates to a stage of evolution of numeration systems to continue counting beyond four, upto ten and then up to twenty by adding units to the ten as a base}.

Oil from the seed is used chiefly as a scent in soaps and perfumes. (James A. Duke, Handbook of Medicinal Herbs, 1985, p.42). 'Dill is an umbelliferous annual with feathery aromatic leaves and umbels with yellow flowers. Dill leaves and, to some extent, dill seeds are widely used in cooking, particularly in Scandinavian countries, where it accompanies shellfish, and the unripe flower head is an important flavouring agent in pickled gherkins... Dioscorides says that it was called arakhou in Egyptian... In ancient Egypt dill was an ingredient in a pain-killing mixture... The seeds were used in an unguent for headache along with bryony, coriander, donkey's fat and two unidentified plants, and in a poultice for the 'vessels' of the shoulder including myrrh, frankincense, chaste-tree, grass, sawdust of fir, sycamore figs, fermented plant juice and three unidentified items... The seeds are used locally for colouring food. The colouring matter of the fruit, annatto, is employed commercially for colouring butter and in the preparation of various polishes for russet leather. According to Burkill, the roots impart to meat the taste and colour of saffron. A fairly good fiber may be obtained from the bark. Etti reports that the colouring matter in the seeds is bixin. The leaves and dye are official in the Dutch and Mexican pharmacopoeias... The red, resinous substance of the seeds is considered an efficient remedy for certain skin diseases... The leaves are a popular febrifuge in Cambodia. (Medicinal Plants of the Philippines, pp.623-624).

It is supposed that it was first known to the Egyptians in the form of an alloy, either native, or as the product of the working of a naturally occurring ore... In Pliny's time, the word was also in use, though recognized as an alloy of gold and silver. In all gold, says Pliny, there is some silver... an 'artificial' electrum, he says, is made by mixing gold and silver... he considers the native quicksilver as different from that obtained by heating 'minium' (cinnabar)... Pliny, lik all other ancient Latin writers, uses but one term 'aes' to designate copper, bronzes, and brass... Gold, as obtained by the Egyptians, was often especially rich in silver, so that the color was notably light, and was considered by them as a different metal -- a white gold or 'asem'. Beads and gold leaf of the twelfth dynasty (perhaps 2000 BC), analyzed by Berthelot, gave 82.94 per cent gold to 16.56 per cent silver, and 85.92 per cent gold to 13.78 per cent silver." (John Maxson Stillman, The Story of Alchemy and Early Chemistry, New York, Dover Publications, Inc., 1924, pp.64-65; p.7). "... Egyptian recipes in the Leyden Papyrus (discovered in a tomb at Thebes in Egypt; written in Greek at c. 300 AD) deal mainly with the production of imitations of an alloy of gold and silver which is called by its old Egyptian name asem (the Greek elektron and Roman electrum), which was regarded as a separate metal... and were even ,better than the real'." The timber is hard, heavy and durable, and is one of the best possible for all purposes where great strength is required and weight is no objection. The resin (ra_l zard) which exudes from the tree is used medicinally and in the arts; a kind of sugar press used in the Simla hills (Punjabi.lex.) Shorea robusta: s'a_la, as'vakarn.a; the resin of shorea robusta, called ra_la in Sanskrit and dhuna_ or ra_l in the vernacular, is regarded as astringent and detergent and is used in dysentery, and for fumigations, plasters etc. The resin thrown over the fire gives out thick volumes of fragrant smoke, and is much used for fumigating rooms occupied by the sick. It is also common practice with natives to burn some ra_l in their rooms every evening, about the time that chirags or lamps are lighted, as also during the worship of idols. In the dysentery of children, ra_l is recommended to be given in doses of about twenty grains, with an equal quantity of sugar or treacle. ra_l enters into the composition of some plasters and ointments. The following is an illustration. Take of ra_l, rock salt, treacle, wax, honey, bdellium, red ochre and clarified butter, in equal parts, boil them together and prepare an ointment (Sanskrit Materia Medica, p.121). cf. ka_d.ige collyrium (Ka.lex.) cf. ka_jal collyrium (Or.)(CDIAL 2622).

The balsam obtained from the trunk of the tree and purified is called 'prepared storax'... It is stimulant, expectorant, diuretic, antiseptic, disinfectant and astringent. Mahomedan physicians regard it to be tonic, resolvent, and astringent... Liquid storax obtained by boiling the inner bark of the tree in water is an aromatic, semi-fluid, opaque, grey balsam. It is used for perfuming medicinal oils; also useful in bronchitis, chronic coughs of the aged, and pulmonary affections and in chronic catarrh of the genito-urinary organs, as cystitis, pyelitis, gonorrhoea, leucorrhoea etc. (Indian Materia Medica, p. 747). Liquidambar orientalis: Storax... from a small tree found in the south-west of Turkey... Collection and preparation. In the early summer the bark is injured by bruising or by making incisions. After a time the outer bark may be pared off, or the whole bark may be left until the autumn, when it is removed. The pieces of bark are pressed in horse-hair bags... The exhausted bark is used in the East for fumigation. The crude or liquid storax is exported in casks from Izmir... Crude storax is a greyish, viscous liquid with a pleasant odour and bitter taste... characteristic balsamic odour and taste... Uses: Storax is chiefly used in the preparation of friars' balsam and benzoin inhalation. (G.E. Trease and W.C. Evans, Pharmacognosy, 12th edn., London, Bailliere Tindall, 1983, pp. 326-327).
