Datura fastuosa, datura alba are allied species of datura stramonium... the dried leaf and flowering or fruiting parts with branches are used. Habitat. Asia... Stramonium is chiefly used to relax the bronchial muscle in the bronchial spams of asthma. It is also employed in postencephalitic Parkinsonism, paralysis agitans, and as an anodyne. Its properties are similar to belladonna and it has been used interchangeably with it... possesses scopolamine as the dominant alkaloid ..." (Heber W. Datura metel = datura alba: The leaves are official in the British, Dutch, Japanese pharmacopoeias; and the seeds are official in the British pharmacopoeia. Nadkarni says that the plant as a whole has narcotic, anodyne, and antispasmodic properties analogous to those of belladonna... an overdose acts as a violent narcotic poison... With regard to the toxicity of the plant, Bacon writes that in all parts of the East this plant is considered to be poisonous and in India and Indo-China is used quite commonly with criminal intent... Gross says that when the leaves are dried and burned with a little saltpetre, the fumes give relief to asthmatic attacks. Halige and koda were used as measures of oil in Karna_t.aka inscriptions (MIAI, p.85; EI.III, p.23). Hara is used as a corn measure in Kathiawar, perhaps a variant of hala (MIAI, p.47.). Hala is mentioned in the inscriptions of S'a_tava_hana, Pallava, Ra_s.t.raku_t.a, Ca_lukya, Parama_ra, Kalachuri and Ca_hama_na dynasties (loc.cit.MIAI, pp.46-47. "...the lands were allotted to agriculturists, who had to give 1/6th of the produce from the land to the Sangha. The Sangha had to provide bulls, the land for cultivation, etc., but was not responsible for any other requirements." [Beal Samuel, Si-yu-ki, I, p.61.] "...In a copper plate of Candella Madanavarmadeva, 7 1/2 dro_n.a of seed are stated to have been used for sowing 10 hala i.e., one hala required 3/4 dro_n.a of seed. [IA, XVI, p.206.]... In the Sunak grant of the Ca_lukya king Karn.a, it is stated that 4 hala of land, required 12 pa_ilam of seed corn for sowing. Hence 1 hala required 3 pa_ilam or 12 seer of seed. [EI, I, p. 316].") These equivalences establish a rough equation: One hala of land: (sowing) grain measure-- 3/4 dro_n.a = 3 pa_ilam = 12 ser; a_d.haka = 50 pala (King's measure in Arthas'a_stra : dro_n.a = 200 pala). The shell is used in the form of a paste, as a perfume and in the preparation of various medicated oils. It is an ingredient of dhupela tela. As a a hair cosmetic it is highly recommended. (Nadkarni, Indian Materia Medica, Vol.II, p.166).

5211.A perfume ingredient: nata bignonia chelonoides, a fragrant ingredient to make a perfume with the fragrance of vakula (Br.hatsam.hita_. LXXVI. 29-30). cf. pa_tiri trumpet-flower tree, stereospermum chelonoides, suaveolens, and xylocarpum (Ta.); trumpet-flower, bignonia suaveolens (Ma.); pa_dari sterospermum chelonoides (Ka.); bignonia chelonoides (Tu.); pa_diri id. (Te.); pa_t.ala_, pa_t.ali_ bignonia suaveolens (Skt)[stereospermum chenonoides = bignonia chelonoides; stereospermum suaveolens = bignonia suaveolens](DEDR 4075). Stereospermum suaveolens: patala, kamaduti, madhuduti (Skt.); paral (H.M.); parul (B.); kalgoripadi (M.Te.); pandan (G.); madan-kamapu flowers of padri; padri (Ta.); hudai (Ka.); kusgol (Konkan.i); flowers contain albuminous saccharine and mucilaginous matters and wax... Ashes are used in the preparation of alkaline water and caustic pastes. (Nadkarni, Indian Materia Medica, Vol. I, p.1168). Stereospermum tetragonum = stereospermum chelonoides: pader (H.); dharmar (B.); padal (M.); patoli (Skt.); kaludi (Ka.); karinkara (Ma.); kural (Ta.); kaligottu (Te.); root, leaves and flowers: used in decoction as febrifuge; juice of leaves: mixed with lime juice used in maniacal cases; flower and fruit: in scorpion-sting; bark contains crystallite bitter substance; habitat: throughout most regions of India (GIMP, p.234). Stereospermum suaveolens: pa_t.ala_ (Skt.); pa_rul (B.); pa_d (H.); this is a middle sized flowering tree, native of Bengal. The flowers are large, of a dark crimson colour and exquisitely fragrant. Steeped in water they impart their fragrance to it. Rubbed up with honey they are given to check hiccup. The root bark is an ingredient of dasamula and is thus largely used in native medicine. It is regarded as cooling, diuretic, and tonic, and is generally used in combination with other medicines. The ashes of this plant are used in the preparation of alkaline water and caustic pastes (Sanskrit Materia Medica, p.204). nat.a, nalake, nal.i, nali a kind of fragrant substance, a perfume (Ka.); gu_vaguttige a sort of perfume = kapo_ta_n:ghri (semant. gu_va dove) = nat.a, nali, dhamani, ajanake_ti (Ka.); guvveguttigad.d.i a sort of perfume (Te.)?grey-coloured ajanake_s'i name of a vegetable perfume

(hat.t.avila_sini_-na_makam gandhadravyam yatsam.yo_ga_t ke_s'asya_ti_va kr.s.n.atvam); nakhala_ (M.)(Skt.lex.) cf. nakha a particular perfume (Ka.)(Ka.lex.)

5212.Lobella nicotianaefolia: nala (B.H.); dhaval (M.); kattuppugaiyilai (Ta.); adavipogaku (Te.); kattupukayila (Ma.); devanala (Skt.); infusion of leaves: antiseptic; leaves and seeds: acrid, poisonous; root: in scorpion-sting; habitat: W. Ghats from Bombay to Travancore at 3,000-7,000 ft., Konkan, Matheran, Deccan, S. Mahrata country, the Nilgiris, Malabar and Mysore. Lobellia excelsa: leaves: smoked in the same way as tobacco; milk of the plant: extremely acrd; habitat: W. Ghats of S. India, the Nilgiris, Pulney Hills and hills of Travancore, above 6,000 ft. (GIMP, p.156). Lobelia nicotianaefolia: This tall, erect, much branched, somewhat hairy herb grows from 1.5 to 3 metres in height. The leaves, resembling those of tobacco, are narrowly obovate-lanceolate... The flowers are large, white... In the Pharmacopoeia of India an infusion of the leaves is said to be used as an antispasmodic. Dymock reports that the dry herb, when handled, is extremely acrid, the dust irritating the throat and nostrils like tobacco. Kirtikar and Basu quote Lisboa, who states that the seeds contain an acro-narcotic poison, and that they are preferred to datura as a poison in India, when a rapid effect is desired (Medicinal Plants of the Philippines, pp. 952-953).

5213.Cosmetic: pu_tikaraja (Skt.)(Sanskrit Materia Medica, p.315). cf. kecca-kka_y, kar..ar--ka_y, kar..ar-ci, kar..al, kar..an:ku molucca bean, caesalpinia bonducella, bonduc nut (Ta.); kar..acci, kar..aci, kar..ar-r-i guilandina bonducella (Ma.); gajuga, gajjuga, gajiga, gajjiga, gajige, gajaga, kel.ijika_yE molucca bean (Ka.); gajig, kad.eji, kal.eji molucca bean (Tu.); g(r)acca caesalpinia bonducella, bonduc (Te.)[caesalpinia = guilandina](DEDR 1347). gajuga a prickly climbing shrub of which the seeds are used for marbles, the molucca bean, guilandina bonducella; a protuberance from the eye-ball resembling a moucca bean (Ka.); ud.d.i-gajuga a heap or pile, especially a pile of three (with a fourth set on the top) made of the beads of the molucca bean (Ka.); cf. ud.d.i (Tu.); ud.d.e (Te.); kurud.u-gajuga a kind of gajuga plant (Ka.)(Ka.lex.) Caesalpinia crista = caesalpinia bonducella: Bacon isolated a bitter, resinous substance called bonducin from the seeds and concludes that it is not a glucoside. Bhaduri states that the seeds yield an alkaloid for which he suggested the name natin... Chopra says that it is doubtful whether the natin of Bhaduri is a glucoside or an alkaloid, as details are not available... Greshoff reports the presence of a bitter resin, a bitter principle, and some alkaloid. According to Bruntz and Jaloux the seeds are official in the Mexican pharmacopoeia... in French Guiana as febrifuge. The roots are also used for the cure of gonorrhoea... Kirtikar and Basu and Nadkarni state that the tender leaves are efficacious in disorders of the liver... Dalzeil states that the bark is said to be rubefacient... Kirtikar and Basu and Nadkarni report that the ointment from the seeds, with castor oil, forms an excellent application to hydrocele, acute orchitis and glandular swellings... oil also used as an embrocation in rheumatism... Chopra adds that the fixed oil expressed from the seeds is emollient and is used as an embrocation to remove freckles, as a cosmetic, and also as a means to stop discharges from the ear... Baillon and Chopra say that the seed is a powerful tonic and a valuable febrifuge. (Medicinal Plants of the Philippines, pp. 369-371).

5214.Euphorbia neriifolia: nanda_, gud.a_, snuhi_ euphorbia neriifolia (Car. Ka. 10.8, Su. 1.114,115); nistrims'apatraka id. (Car. Ka. 10.8); maha_vr.ks.a id. (Car. cf. sudu-sudu common milk sedge, euphorbia neriifolia (Tagalog. Philippines). "... cultivated in gardens... It also occurs in India to Malaya, probably introduced in the latter region... a fluid extracted from the roasted leaves is used for earache... Nadkarni states that the milky juice is used by vaidyans as a drastic cathartic... beneficial in asthma... the root mixed with black pepper is employed in snake bites... root is considered antiseptic. the milky juice is regarded as a purgative internally and a rubefacient externally... Externally the juice is applied to remove warts and similar excrescences... Turmeric powder mixed with the juice of euphorbia neriifolia is recommended as an application to piles." (Medicinal Plants of the Philippines, pp. 503-504). cf. euphorbia resinifera. Part used: the dried resinous latex. Habitat: Morocco. The Arabs collect Euphorbium from shrubs growing in the mountainous sections of Morocco by cutting incisions dep into the branches of the plants during the rainy season when the flow of latex is abudant... brought to the town of Morocco, then carried to Mogadore from whence it is exported. Uses: vesicant in veterinary medicine, drastic cathartic, and as a constituent of anti-mould paints for ship hulls. Euphorbia pilulifera: euphorbia, pill-bearing spurge, snake weed, cat's hair; part used: the dried plant; habitat: India; use: euphorbia is employed as a constituent of certain asthma preparations, including Hare's elixir. It is an antihistaminic. (Heber W. Youngken, Textbook of Pharmacognosy, Philadelphia, The Blakiston Co., 1950, pp. 526-527).

It has been found on cloth of Dynasty V (about 2500 BC) and on later mummy wrappings, though it did not become common until about 300 BC. The indigo plant, indigofera tinctoria, was then cultivated in Egypt and Syria, but not in Palestine. Classical authors like Dioscorides and Pliny believed indigo to be a mineral pigment. They knew, however, that it originally came from India. Woad, from isatis tinctoria, was well known by 300 BC both in Egypt and in Mesopotamia..." (Charles Singer, E.J. Holmyard, A.R.Hall, Trevor I. The oxidized product--chiefly indigotin or Indigo-blue which settles to the bottom is collected, washed, pressed into cakes 3 to 3 1/2 inches square, and finally dried. The yield of indigo may be upto 50 percent. Indigotin is insoluble in water, alcohol and dilute acids; soluble in strong sulphuric acid, forming a sulphate of indigo called 'extract of indigo'.[cf. Nadkarni, K.M.,Indian Materia Medica, Bombay, 1927.] The flowers of the plant are small, reddish or reddish yellow. The plant is a stimulant, alterative, and purgative; is antiseptic and astringent; used to treat enlargement of the liver and spleen, epilepsy, and other nervous afflictions. Leaves and indigo have been used in epilepsy, hepatitis; asthma, whooping cough, some lung diseases and kidney complaints such as dropsy; powdered indigo is also used for sprinkling on ulcers; to reduce swellings in the body, to relieve the bites and stings of venomous insects and reptiles, and also to sooth burns and scalds. Mixed with castor oil, it is applied to the navels of children to promote the action of the bowels. [Quisumbing, E., Medicinal Plants of the Philippines, Manila, 1978, p.409.] Among the Mundas of Chota Nagpur the roots, pounded and macerated in water, are drunk in urinary complaints. As in England, the blue bag is used in China as a domestic remedy for the stings of bees and wasps. In Cambodia, the leaves are given as a decoction for blennorrhagia. In Madagascar, indigo is given as an emeto-cathartic for convulsions in children. Used as a cover-crop, it is said to be an effective nematicide. Once Indigofera tinctoria was a source of Indian indigo but it was largely replaced by Indigofera arrecta. Leaves are rich in potash, and the plant is palatable to cattle. Root infusion used to kill vermin and a seed tincture to kill lice. Leaf or juice used for cancer or tumours, especially of the ovaries or stomach...Leaves applied with turmeric to bruises, inflammations, and scabies in Indo-China... In Tanganyika, the root is used for syphilis... The plant contains indigotin and a glucoside, indican...Dermatitis is common among indigo dyers but there is no direct evidence that indigo or its derivatives is responsible. Women who shell indigo develop an exceptionally long right thumb..." [Duke, James A., Handbook of Medicinal Herbs, Florida, CRC Press, 1985, p.248.] A preparation is made from the ashes of the burnt plant Indigofera aspalathoides to remove dandruff from the hair; the leaves are applied to abscesses; and an oil is obtained from the root whichis used to anoint the head in erysipelas. Used specially of a person who buys a crop of unripe dates, watches it while ripening, picks the fruit, and sells it by retail. Under the government of Diwan Sawan Mall the baikhars were an important body. The government took the whole of the date-crop, no right of the owners of the land to the fruit being admitted. Each year in har.h (June-July), the date-crop was valued and sold at a fixed price to the baikhars, who were usually the persons who had bought the fruit of the same trees in former years. From the time of sale they had to bear all expenses of watching, picking, drying and selling by retail. The price fixed was rigorously exacted. Rain or a fall in the price of dates of course caused them much loss, but no remissions were allowed on this or any other account. The British government has, however, admitted the right of the owners of the soil to the date trees, upon which a cash assessment has been made. Baikhars are now those who buy the unripe crop from the land owners, and watch, harvest and sell the fruit. The trade is very profitable. They absorb most of the profits that have arisen from the grant by government of proprietary rights: baikhara_n. de ajab cha_le; hik ma_n.h khat.de, kha_n.de sa_ra_ sa_le the ways of baikhars are wonderful; they work for one month, and live a whole year on the Mundari khuntkattidar as defined in the Chota-Nagpur Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act, 1913 'means a Mundari who has acquired a right to hold jungle land for the purpose of bringing suitable portions thereof under cultivation by himself or by male members of his family and includes the heirs in the male line of any such Mundari...' (Mu.lex.) khu~_t., khu_t., ku_t. either of two branches of the village family. These are: pahr.khu~_t., pr.ku_t. the elder branch, to which the official village sacrificer must belong; and the mund.akhu_t. the younger branch, in which the position of village chief is hereditary (Mu.); kht. (Oraon); ... the pure Mundari khuntkatti village usually contains three elements, namely (1) the khuntkattidars, (2) the parjas or raiyats, and (3) the subsidiary castes. The khuntkattidars are the descendants in the male line of the original founders of the village. As such they are all akin, of equal status and differing in wealth mainly owing to differences in size of the families of their ancestors. As a group they are the owners of the whole of the area included in the village boundaries, subject to the payment of a fixed annual rent to the superior landlord. This annual rent was originally made up solely out of the subscriptions (chandas) of the various khuntkattidars; but in most villages these subscriptions, or some of them, have now been reduced, the deficit being made good from the rent paid by the parjas. The amount of a man's subscription, no doubt, originally corresponded with the share of the cultivated lands which he inherited; but, inasmuch as the uncultivated lands, though as such held in common, were liable to be appropriated by any individual khuntkattidar who might reduce them to cultivation, such correspondence is not now found to exist. It is to be noted that the cultivated lands are not held in common, and that no trace is found of the existence of any custom of equalization of shares or periodic re-distribution of lands... The parjas are almost invariably Mundaris, and very often are relatives on the female's side of the khuntkattidars. They are in no sense co-owners of the village, and can bring under cultivation only such specific lands as may from time to time be given to them. The subsidiary castes (Pernains, Mahilis or Khangars, Bhogtas, and Barais) perform the non-agricultural functions necessary to the village life and rarely cultivate land... the community looks on itself as a family, and as such requiring a head or common representative, called pahanr, to exercise over the whole village functions exercised in his own household by the individual head of the family. These are both religious and civil... Inasmuch as the sacrificer exercises important religious functions which are incumbent on him in his quality as elder or head of the village family, he is called pahanr. He is pahanr because he is the real social elder, or head, or patriarch of the village family... The civil functions ... presiding over panchayats for the settlement of various kinds of disputes... inflicting punishments (generally fines, sometimes expulsion)... collecting and transmitting to the proper authority the various amounts owing as quit-rent and other dues... In the exercise of these civil functions the pahanr was assisted by the next most prominent and influential member of the community, the mund.a... A khuntkatti area is subdivided into circles called pat.is. The pat.i comprises generally at least ten or twelve villages. The manki is the chief of a pat.i, and his duties now consist mainly in realizing the quit-rents due by the villages of his pat.i to the superior landlord, as well as other dues, such as road-cess and rakumats... the villages of a pat.i are divided into two categories, viz., (1) thakur villages, or those which contribute the superior landlord's share of the rent; and (2) chaputa villages, or those which contribute the manki's share of the rent... As a rule, the manki makes out a collective receipt in the names of both the mund.a and the pahanr; and in some instances two separate receipts are given, one to the mund.a and one to the pahanr... In west Sonpur are found the parhas, consisting of groups of eight or more villages... (Mu.lex.) par.ha a group formed by all the villages of a clan which are grouped around the original village (Mu.); pa_r.a_ sportive association of a group of villages (Oraon); cf. pat.i, pi_r. (Mu.lex.) pa_t.-mund.a or hatumund.a, maran mund.a a village chief who does not collect himself the rent in all his hamlets but has under him one or several hamlet chiefs called t.olamund.a, hur.in mund.a (or kiliren mund.a when the clan of the hamlet differs from that of the village) who collect it in their respective hamlets and hand it over to him. He in his turn hands it over with the rest of the village rent to the manki (Mu.lex.) pr.a, pahr., pahanr the official sacrificer; the head of a village (Mu.lex.) pat.i_ the group of villages under a mr.ki (Mu.); pat.t.i division of a village (H.); pat.t.i_ town, village (Ta.)(Mu.lex.)

santalinus (Mu_. A.); cecantan-am red sanders; Travancore red-wood, gluta travancorica (Ta.lex.) Caesalpina sappan is used in dyeing. It is a small tree, 3 to 5 metres high, with scattered prickles. The flowers are yellow with a red spot at the base. It is called sapang in the Philippines < Malay. It is chiefly used as a dyewood, being very popular for colouring the native fabrics. Dymock, W., The Vegetable Materia Medica of Western India, London, 1885, p.205: the colouring matter of sappan wood is identical with brazilin obtained from brazilwood. In addition to brazilin, the resinous extract of sappan wood contains gallic and tannic acids. The leaves (19 %) and bark and fruit walls (44%) contain tannin. bakam the heart-wood of caesalpina sappan used for dyeing a kind of red, logwood; wakam, vakam sapan wood, caesalpinia sapan, used for dyeing a kind of red. Indian Medicinal Plants, Vol.II, p. 848]. Santanum album: "candana (Skt.); s'ri_khan.d.a (Skt.); chandan (B.); saphed chandan (H.); Sanskrit writers describe several varieties of chandana and some include the woods of pterocarpus santalinus (raktachandana) and caesalpinia sappan (pattanga) under this common denomination. Excluding these last, two varieties of sandal wood are generally recognised, namely, s'ri_khan.d.a or white sandal wood and pitachandana or the yellow variety. These varieties are founded on the difference in the depth of colour in the heart-wood and not on any specific difference in the plants. The use of sandal wood in carving, and the elegant and fragrant articles made from it, are too well known to need description here. The Hindus use an emulsion of the wood in the worship of their idols and for painting or anointing their bodies after bathing. Rich natives sometimes use sandal wood for burning their dead relatives. Rich or poor, all add at least one piece of the wood to the funeral pile. The essential oil of chandan (chua chandana) obtained by distillation from the heart-wood and roots, is of a pale yellow colour and has a peculiar fragrant smell best appreciated by rubbing a few drops of it on the hand. It is much used as a perfume by the Hindus both for themselves and for their idols. In Orissa it is a practice with the better classes to rub a little sandal oil in the spices which they take with their betel-leaf. Sandal wood is described as bitter, cooling, astringent, and useful in biliousness, vomitting, fever, thirst and heat of the body. An emulsion of the wood is used as a cooling application to the skin in erysipelas, prurigo and sudamina... to check gastric irritability and dysentery, and to relieve thirst and heat of body." (Sanskrit Materia Medica, pp. 225-226). cf. s'ri_gandha, siriganda, s'ri_khan.d.a, sirikan.d.a sandal-wood; patra_n:ga, patan:ga sappan wood, caesalpina sappan a small prickly tree yielding sappan wood; red sanders, pterocarpus santolinus, rakta-candana; candana, candan.a, candala, candal.a, canda_l.a sandal, strium myrtifolium: either the tree, the wood, or the unctuous preparation of the wood; canda_l.a a kind of sandal, kr.s.n.a_garu candana (Ka.M.)(Ka.lex.) Caesalpinia sappan: Sapang (Tagalog) is chiefly used as a dyewood... to colour the native fabrics... brazilin is the colouring matter... The wood is official in the British and Indian pharmacopoeias... The seeds are used as a stomachic in Indo-China. (Medicinal Plants of the Philippines, pp.374-375). Pterocarpus indicus: erravegisa (Ta.); padauk (B.); gum is used as a substitute for gum kino (Indian Materia Medica, p. 1024). Narra (Tagalog) is a very valuable wood which is highly prized both for cabinet and building purposes. The wood is used locally as a red dye, which is called narrin by Brooks. The wood is official in the French, Portuguese and Spanish pharmacopoeias... It contains a kino, a term adopted from a West African language signifying the gum of pterocarpus, which is well known as a Malay medicine. It is given for diarrhoea and dysentery after being purified by boiling and subsequent evaporation to dryness. Its chief constituent is kino-tannic acid. It is a powerful astringent. In Java a decoction of the bark or the kino is used for thrush, and the kino is administered to arrest diarrhoea. The young leaves are applied to ripening boils, ulcers, and prickly heat. Ridley quotes Hohne, who states that the juice of the root is used as an application to syphilitic sores. "The Hitnahebbagilu plates (Epigraphica Carnataca, Vol. IV, p. 136, Hunsur No. 18; parihr.ta-pan:g-otkot.a) of Kadamba Mr.ges'varman (c. 470-90 A.D.) mention a number of privileges to be enjoyed by the donee, the most interesting of them being the exemption from pan:ga and utkot.ta. pan:ga or pa_n:ga is also mentioned in other records of the Kannad.a speaking area such as Kapoli plates (Epigraphica Indica, Vol. XXXI, pp. 234 ff.) of As'an:kitavarman (6th century A.D.), the Goa plates (JBBRS, Vol. X, pp. 348 ff.) of Satya_s'raya Dhruvara_ja Indravarman, a grant (1107 A.D. Epigraphic Indica, Vol. XXX, pp. 77 ff.) of Kadamba Tribhuvanamall and the Panjim plates (ibid., Vol. XXXIII, p. 54) of Jayakes'in I. The word pan:ga = pa_n:ga found in the said inscriptions is no doubt the same as Telugu pan:gamu recognised in Brown's Telugu-English Dictionary in the sense of a 'tax in the shape of one-fourth of the produce collected in olden times by the government on lands in the possession of gods and Bra_hman.as'. But expressions like sarva-pan:ga-parihr.ta, 'exempt from all the pan:gas', suggests that sometimes the word was used to indicate a tax in general. And this is supported by the use of the word pan:ga (rarely pan:ga_) in a large number of medieval Telugu inscripions (ibid., p. 55-56) sometimes in the sense of a group of levies. In these records, we have, besides pan:ga-tappu and pan:ga-s'ulka or pan:ga-tappu-s'ulka in a single compound, the word used along with other levies called a_ya-s'ulka, pannu, ka_n.ika, dars'ana, upaks.iti, put.t.i and ma_d.alu. Both a_ya and s'ulka mean 'tolls, tax, customs etc.', and the compound a_ya-s'ulka may mean 'customs duties'. Wilson's glossary recognises pannu as a Tamil word meaning 'tax, tribute, custom, rent' and it is also recognised by Brown as a Telugu word meaning 'a tax'. ka_n.ika may be Kannad.a ka_n.ike-ka_n.e or ka_n.ike-kappa (or kappa-ka_n.ike) recognised by WIlson in the sense of a 'present from an inferior to a superior, a subscription, a donation'. Brown recognises Telugu ka_nika or ka_nuka in the same sense. dars'ana is the Tamil pa_vai and Persian nazra_na. put.t.i reminds us of Telugu put.t.idosillu recognised by Wilson in the sense of a 'fee of two handfuls from each put.t.i of grain paid to the village servants'. ma_d.alu reminds us what Wilson says under ma_d.a : 'a half pagoda; where it is applied to a rate of rent, payment of 50 per cent'. The expression pan:gatappu may indicate interest or fine on arrears of pan:ga. upaks.iti probably means the tax on a particular kind of land such as khajjana. The word utkot.a, mentioned in the Hitnabebbagilu plates, is not known from Sanskrit lexions. But there is no doubt that it is the same as Prakrit ukkod.a meaning 'things to be offered to the ra_jakula (i.e. the king, royal officers and members of the royal family), and 'presents made to the king and others'.

"... for about two centuries (both before the Buddha's birth and after his death), the paramount power in India was Kosala-- a kingdom stretching from Nepal on the North to the Ganges on the South, and from the Ganges on the West to the territories of the Vajjian confederacy on the East. In this, the most powerful kingdom in India; there had naturally arisen a standard vernacular differing from the local forms of speech... The Pali of the canonical books is based on that standard Kosala vernacular spoken in the 6th and 7th centuries B.C. It cannot be called the 'literary' form of that vernacular, for it was not written at all till long afterwards. That vernacular was the mother tongue of the Buddha... in one of the earliest Pali documents Buddha is represented as calling himself a Kosalan. When about a thousand years afterwards, some pandits in Ceylon began to write in Pali, they wrote in a style strikingly different from that of the old texts... There is no evidence that the Sinhalese at that time knew Sanskrit... the vernacular on which Pali is based had never passed through the stage of Sanskrit... " (T.W. Rhys Davids and William Stede, Pali-English Dictionary, 1921-25, pp. v-vii).
